We are unable to disclose the RSVP email address which was included at the bottom of the invitation as this information constitutes personal data and disclosure would contravene one or more of the data protection principles set out in the General Data Protection Regulation as it applies in the United Kingdom (UK GDPR). As such, this information is exempt from disclosure in accordance with section 40(2) of the Freedom of Information Act 2000 (FOIA). Full details as to why this exemption has been applied are set out in the annex to this letter.

Yours sincerely

Annex

The definition of personal data is set out in Article 4 of the UK GDPR, being:

"any information relating to an identified or identifiable person ('data subject'); an identifiable natural person is one who can be identified, directly or indirectly, in particular by reference to an identifier such as a name, an identification number, location data, an online identifier or to one or more factors specific to the physical, physiological, genetic, mental, economic, cultural or social identity of that natural person".

The request captures the RSVP email address contained at the bottom of the event invitation, which contains an individual's name. This constitutes that individual's personal data.

In addressing whether disclosure would be fair, we have considered the consequences of disclosure, the reasonable expectations of the persons concerned and the balance between their rights and any legitimate interest in disclosure. Our conclusion is that disclosure would be unfair.

Disclosures under FOIA are to the 'world at large' and not just the individual who made the request, as explained in guidance issued by the Information Commissioner's Office. The individual captured by the request does not carry an expectation of disclosure of their personal information to the world at large. They do not undertake a public facing role, unlike (for example) elected representatives, who are accountable to the public and do not have the same expectation of privacy. In reaching this conclusion, we have consulted with the event organiser, Bute Energy, which has confirmed that this personal information should not be shared.

In our view, to disclose this personal data would create a disproportionate infringement on the individual's interests, fundamental rights and freedoms. Disclosure would not add to the substance of our response to a degree sufficient to warrant the overriding of those fundamental rights and freedoms. We have disclosed the rest of the invitation aside from the RSVP email address, as well as the other requested information relating to the list of attendees. In our view, this goes some way to ensuring transparency and accountability, meeting the legitimate interest in disclosure.

Notwithstanding my view as to fairness, I went on to consider Article 6 of the UK GDPR. None of the legal bases in Article 6 is relevant other than Article 6(1)(f), which allows the processing of personal data if:

"processing is necessary for the purposes of the legitimate interests pursued by the controller or by a third party, except where such interests are overridden by the interests or fundamental rights and freedoms of the data subject which require protection of personal data, in particular where the data subject is a child."

This condition involves a three-part test:

- there must be a legitimate interest in disclosing the information;
- the disclosure must be necessary to meet that legitimate interest; and
- the disclosure must not override the interests, fundamental rights or freedoms of the data subjects.

We have given careful consideration to the relevant interests which include: the Commission's obligations under the UK GDPR and the Data Protection Act 2018; your right to access this information; the individuals' concerned and their right to privacy; and the public interest in this information being disclosed.

There is a general legitimate interest in transparency and accountability in public life. However, in our view, providing you with this personal information would not add sufficiently to the substance of our response to justify overriding the interests, fundamental rights and freedoms of those individuals.

The High Court found in Corporate Officer of the House of Commons v Information Commissioner and Brooke, Leapman and Ungoed-Thomas [2008] that any interference must be proportionate. As explained above, the other information provided in response to your request is, in our view, a balanced way of meeting the legitimate interest whilst ensuring the interests, fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual is protected.
