

Regulated Mobile Home Sites (Wales) Bill

Explanatory Memorandum

This Explanatory Memorandum has been prepared by Peter Black AM and is laid before the National Assembly for Wales.

Declaration on Legislative Competence

In my view the provisions of the Regulated Mobile Home Sites (Wales) Bill, introduced by me on 24 October 2012 would be within the legislative competence of the National Assembly for Wales.

Part 1: Background and overview of the Bill

1. Introduction

1. On 29 November 2011 Peter Black AM was successful in the ballot held under Standing Order 26.87 for the right to seek leave to introduce a Member Bill. His proposal related to park homes. On 1 February 2012 the National Assembly for Wales agreed that Mr Black could lay a Bill to give effect to the pre-ballot information he provided.
2. This Explanatory Memorandum has been prepared and laid in accordance with Standing Order 26.6. It sets out the background to the provisions and scope of the Bill.
3. 'Park home' is the common name for a residential mobile home which is a permanent residence and situated on a site licensed by the local authority for residential use.
4. 'Park home' is not a legal term, so the Bill and this Explanatory Memorandum refer to 'mobile homes' and 'regulated sites' throughout, except where it is necessary to refer to 'caravans' or 'caravan sites' for legal reasons when referring to existing legislation. A 'regulated site' is one on which at least one mobile home is stationed under an agreement to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies.
5. This Bill has a number of objectives. Firstly, to introduce a new licensing regime for mobile home sites and to give local authorities sufficient powers to enforce that regime. This will include ensuring that site owners and managers pass a fit and proper person test, modelled on the test that already applies to Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs). The Bill will also give the Welsh Ministers powers to approve a code of practice with regard to the management of sites as well as powers to make management regulations. Additionally, the Bill seeks to modernise a number of aspects of the contractual relationship between mobile home owners and site operators, including changes to the process by which homes are bought and sold.
6. This Bill does not affect the law relating to holiday or touring caravan sites, although it will affect mixed use sites, i.e. sites used for a combination of residential and holiday purposes as far as the residential parts are concerned. The Bill will not affect local authority Gypsy Traveller sites.

2. Legislative background

7. The National Assembly for Wales' Standing Orders provides for Bills to be introduced by backbench Assembly Members, as well as the Welsh Government, where the National Assembly has legislative competence in a policy area.
8. The legislative competence enabling the National Assembly for Wales to make an Act in relation to mobile homes is contained in Part 1 of Schedule 7 to the Government of Wales Act 2006 ("the 2006 Act"). In particular, heading 11 (Housing) of that Part specifically includes residential caravans and mobile homes; heading 12 (Local Government) specifically includes the powers and duties of local authorities and their members and officers; and heading 18 (Town and Country Planning) specifically includes caravan sites. The relevant headings from Part 1 of Schedule 7 to the 2006 Act are reproduced below with the relevant subjects highlighted:

Heading 11 Housing

Housing finance except schemes supported from central or local funds which provide assistance for social security purposes to or in respect of individuals by way of benefits. Encouragement of home energy efficiency and conservation, otherwise than by prohibition or regulation. Regulation of rent. Homelessness. Residential caravans and mobile homes.

Heading 12 Local government

Constitution, structure and areas of local authorities. Electoral arrangements for local authorities. Powers and duties of local authorities and their members and officers. Local government finance.

"Local authorities" does not include police authorities [police and crime commissioners].

Exceptions—

Local government franchise.

Electoral registration and administration.

Registration of births, marriages, civil partnerships and deaths.

Licensing of sale and supply of alcohol, provision of entertainment and late night refreshment.

Anti-social behaviour orders.

Local land charges, apart from fees.

Sunday trading.

Provision of advice and assistance overseas by local authorities in connection with carrying on there of local government activities.

Heading 18 Town and Country Planning

Town and country planning, including listed buildings [and conservation areas]. Caravan sites. Spatial planning. Mineral workings. Urban development. New towns. Protection of visual amenity.

Exception—

Development consent under the Planning Act 2008

There are no general restrictions or exemptions to those restrictions in the 2006 Act.

Minister of the Crown functions in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, the Caravan Sites Act 1968, and the Mobile Homes Act 1983 have been transferred to Welsh Ministers by the National Assembly for Wales (Transfer of functions) Order 1999 except for the Treasury functions under paragraph 6 of the second schedule to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

The Treasury functions under paragraph 6 of the Second Schedule to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 relate to Orders regarding commons and Crown land in limited circumstances.

9. The existing primary legislation that is relevant to this Bill is:

- The Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (the 1960 Act) which provides for the licensing of caravan sites by local authorities;
- The Caravan Sites Act 1968 (the 1968 Act) which protects mobile home owners from unlawful eviction and harassment;
- The Mobile Homes Act 1983 (the 1983 Act) which regulates the contractual relationship between home owners and site operators and provides security of tenure to residents on residential mobile home sites; and
- The Protection from Harassment Act 1997 which covers behaviour that would amount to an offence under the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

10. The principal secondary legislation that is relevant to this Bill is:

- The Mobile Homes (Commissions) Order 1983 which sets a maximum rate of 10 per cent commission that can be claimed by the site operator on the sale of a mobile home;
- The Mobile Homes (Written Statement) (Wales) Regulations 2007 which outlines the information that must be given to a proposed purchaser prior to an agreement to purchase a mobile home. The Welsh Government has confirmed that these regulations are expected to be updated in late 2012;
- The Mobile Homes Act 1983 (Amendment of Schedule 1) (Wales) Order 2007 amends Schedule 1 to the 1983 Act to provide greater protection and security for occupiers and to confirm and clarify the parties' rights and obligations; and
- The Mobile Homes Act 1983 (Jurisdiction of Residential Property Tribunal) (Wales) Order 2012 transferred jurisdiction of disputes under the 1983 Act to the Residential Property Tribunal (the Tribunal).

11. The statutory guidance that is most relevant to this Bill is:

- The Welsh Government's Model Standards 2008 for Caravan Sites in Wales made under section 5(6) of the 1960 Act and issued in July 2008 which are for local authorities to use when considering what conditions to attach to a licence. They make provision for the layout, provision of facilities, services, and equipment for caravan sites.

3. Purpose and intended effect of the Bill

Overview

12. This Bill introduces a new licensing, inspection and enforcement regime for residential mobile home sites in Wales. The Bill refers to these sites as "regulated sites". This will include those parts of mixed use sites used for residential purposes. This new regime is based upon the existing legislative framework that applies to Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs). As with HMO licensing, there will be a requirement for site operators (both owners and managers) to pass a fit and proper person test. Additionally, the Bill will make a number of other changes that affect the contractual relationship between the home owner and the site operator. This includes giving mobile home owners the right to sell a mobile home without the prior agreement of the site owner, and to assign the agreement.

Policy context

13. The Welsh Government's national housing strategy, Improving Lives and Communities – Homes in Wales, was published in April 2010.¹ The strategy recognises the diversity of the housing market in Wales, and the importance of delivering the types of housing people actually want to live in. For over 3,400 households in Wales a mobile home is their chosen form of housing.²
14. In December 2011 the Minister for Housing, Regeneration and Heritage published *Meeting the housing challenge: building a consensus for action*³, which was a consultation document to inform work on the forthcoming Housing Bill. Mobile homes were highlighted in the consultation as an area where there was a need for reform. In particular, the inadequacies of the current licensing regime and concerns about poor management on some sites were noted. In the 2012 housing White Paper, *Homes for Wales: A White Paper for Better Lives and Communities*⁴, the Welsh Government notes its concerns about the current legislative framework for mobile homes which in its view “needs to be modernised”. The White Paper goes on to state that the Welsh Government's goal is to:
- Ensure that residents can enjoy their chosen style of home with reasonable protection against dubious practices.⁵
15. Many mobile home owners are older people, and therefore likely to be living on fixed incomes, spending their retirement on a mobile home site for lifestyle as well as financial reasons. Research published jointly by the UK and Welsh Governments in 2002 estimated that 68 per cent of residents on mobile home sites were aged over 60 compared with 33 per cent of the population as a whole. The same study found that 64 per cent of households on mobile home sites had a monthly income of less than £800 per month. This compared with 30 per cent in the population at large.⁶ With an ageing population, it is a reasonable assumption that demand for this type of accommodation is likely to increase.

16. In recent years, the problems being experienced on some mobile home sites have come to public attention. Some credit for bringing these issues to public attention can be given to campaigns led by mobile home residents themselves such as through the Park Home Owners' Justice Campaign, as well as the criminal prosecutions of some site operators in England.⁷
17. Until recently there has been a paucity of robust data on the mobile home sector in Wales, and indeed throughout the rest of Britain. However, recent research commissioned by Consumer Focus Wales (CFW) has meant that, for the first time, there is a firmer evidence base for policy makers and legislators to draw upon.
18. The CFW research found that there were 92 residential mobile home sites in Wales, spread across 19 local authorities. In its response to the consultation on the proposals in this Bill, CFW note that its research highlighted that a significant number of mobile home owners who participated in the research expressed dissatisfaction with their site. Some of the issues raised by home owners were in relation to selling and buying mobile homes, the appearance of the site, concerns about their contracts with the site operator (their written statements) and pitch fees.
19. Many problems associated with the management of sites have been allowed to develop because of a licensing regime that is more suited to the 1960s than the modern world. Local authorities, who are the licensing authorities, have neither the powers nor the resources to regulate mobile home sites effectively.
20. Although there have been attempts to modernise the contractual relationship between home owners and site operators by amending the implied terms in Schedule 1 of the 1983 Act, unscrupulous site operators can still use this legislation to frustrate the sales of mobile homes.
21. This lack of effective regulation and legislation that is open to abuse has arguably encouraged less scrupulous elements into the sector that sometimes use dubious practices to maximise profits at the expense of home owners, many of whom could be regarded as vulnerable because of age or ill health. For example, it has been alleged that one motive for this behaviour is so that site owners can buy the mobile home at a greatly reduced price and either re-sell it at market value, or put a new home on the site which can then be sold. In either scenario the site operator stands to make a substantial profit.

⁷ A/DCI Colquhoun (West Mercia Constabulary), Criminality within the park home industry – Best practice guidance

22. This Bill will seek to address these issues, in particular the practice of sale blocking which is only possible because of the shortcomings of current legislation. This Bill will seek to ensure that sale blocking will no longer be possible, and the contractual relationship between home owners and site operators will be subject to better statutory regulation.
23. The case for improving rights for mobile home owners has been taken up by politicians in both Wales and at Westminster where two private members' bills seeking to reform the law in this area were introduced during the 2010/12 parliamentary session.⁸
24. During the third Assembly, in addition to a consultation that led to the transfer of disputes⁹ under the 1983 Act from the courts to the Tribunal, there was a consultation specifically on modernising the licensing regime that also took place on an England and Wales basis. That consultation, *Improving the Management of Residential Park Home Sites*¹⁰, was issued in May 2009 and considered how a modern licensing system might look.
25. In March 2010 a paper outlining responses to the 2009 consultation, and how these proposals could be taken forward, Park homes site licensing reform: the way forward and next steps,¹¹ was published. However, none of its proposals have yet been implemented. Both governments stated their policy intentions, which included introducing a fit and proper person test for site operators, and a range of other proposals to strengthen the licensing regime. Many of the 2010 paper's proposals are now reflected in this Bill.

Recent developments

26. In late 2011, the Communities and Local Government Select Committee at the House of Commons announced that it was to conduct an inquiry into park homes. This followed representations to Members of Parliament by constituents and campaigning groups. The Committee's report was published in June 2012 and made a range of recommendations for reform.¹² These included removing the right of site operators to veto the sale of mobile homes. On the issue of whether site operators should be required to satisfy a fit and proper person test, the Committee found that:

A fit and proper person test could be a useful addition to local authorities' armoury to exclude the worst offenders from owning and managing park home sites.¹³

27. The Committee specifically disagreed with the UK Housing minister, Grant Shapps MP, who argued that comparisons should not be made with HMO licensing. However, it stopped short of recommending that a fit and proper person test be introduced, preferring instead to call for enabling legislation to be brought forward that would allow ministers to introduce a scheme in future if it proved necessary. The Committee's report is available in full on Parliament's website.¹⁴
28. While the Select Committee was taking evidence for its inquiry, in April 2012 the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG) published a further consultation document on the park home industry, A Better Deal for Mobile Home Owners, which applies to England only. The consultation covered many of the same issues that this Bill seeks to address, although a notable divergence is that it does not seek to introduce a fit and proper person test for site operators.
29. The UK government has indicated that the Bill that emerges from this consultation will be taken forward by a backbench MP, with the support of the government. Peter Aldous MP has since been successful in the ballot to introduce private members' legislation and has indicated he is willing to take the Bill forward. The first reading of the Mobile Homes Bill 2012-13 was on 20 June 2012. The second reading took place on 19 October 2012.¹⁵
30. A Scottish Government consultation on the licensing of caravan sites was launched in May 2012. However, that consultation covers both mobile homes and holiday caravans and focuses purely on licensing issues.

Licensing of Houses in Multiple Occupation

31. As has been noted, this Bill makes proposals for reform of licensing based upon the regime introduced for Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) by the Housing Act 2004.

32. Prior to the implementation of the 2004 Act, local authorities had discretionary powers under the Housing Act 1985, as amended by the Housing Act 1996, to introduce registration schemes for HMOs within specified areas. Practice varied between local authorities and this led to differing approaches across Wales. In addition to mandatory registration schemes, many local authorities introduced voluntary accreditation schemes in a bid to raise standards (both physical standards and management standards) across the private rented sector, and in particular in relation to HMOs.
33. The 2004 Act brought with it a new statutory requirement for larger HMOs to be licensed across all of England and Wales. Local authorities have discretionary powers to license smaller HMOs either in specified areas, or across all of their area, following a General Approval from Welsh Ministers that was issued in March 2007. It is a statutory requirement that the licence holder and manager of the house are fit and proper persons.
34. The 2004 Act requires local authorities to have regard to certain matters when determining whether the relevant person is a 'fit and proper person'. Specifically, it requires to the local authority to consider whether the person has:
- committed any offence involving fraud or other dishonesty, or violence or drugs, or any offence listed in Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c 42) (offences attracting notification requirements);
 - practised unlawful discrimination on grounds of sex, colour, race, ethnic or national origins or disability in, or in connection with, the carrying on of any business;
 - contravened any provision of the law relating to housing or of landlord and tenant law; or
 - acted otherwise than in accordance with any applicable code of practice.
35. The 2004 Act also requires local authorities to have regard to whether any associates of the applicant would contravene any of the above.
36. These matters have been replicated in this Bill, and enhanced to include discrimination on the grounds of any protected characteristic under the Equality Act 2010.
37. As with the HMO licensing system, there are provisions within the Bill for local authorities to charge for their licensing function, enforcement notices and repayment orders in cases of unlicensed sites.

The current licensing regime for mobile homes

38. Existing licensing requirements under the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 make provision for the licensing of all caravan sites. It therefore covers holiday sites, touring sites, residential mobile home sites and mixed sites. As noted earlier, the provisions in the 1960 Act applicable to non-residential sites will be unaffected by this Bill, although mixed use sites will be affected in so far as they are occupied by permanent residents.
39. Under the 1960 Act, land cannot lawfully be used as a mobile home site unless it has both the appropriate planning permission and the site operator has a licence from the local authority.
40. The 1960 Act requires that:
- Subject to the provisions of [Part I of the] Act, no occupier of land shall after the commencement of [the] Act cause or permit any part of the land to be used as a caravan site unless he is the holder of a site licence (that is to say, a licence under [Part I] of this Act authorising the use of land as a caravan site) for the time being in force as respects the land so used.¹⁶
41. Operating a mobile home site without a licence is currently a summary offence which carries a fine up to level 4 on the standard scale, currently £2,500. The level of this penalty is unlikely to be an effective deterrent, so this Bill will increase the limit applicable to residential sites to level 5 on the standard scale, currently £5,000 when heard by the magistrates' court. If the case is heard in the crown court, the fine will be unlimited.
42. A site may be licensed for holiday purposes, touring purposes, residential purposes, or the site may be mixed use, where there are both residential units and holiday units. The site licence can prescribe a set number of pitches that can be used for a specific purpose. The local authority may not currently charge a fee for processing or issuing a licence. This is a significant hindrance to adequately resourcing the work of local authorities and therefore this Bill will permit local authorities to charge a fee for issuing a licence.
43. The existing provisions of the 1960 Act mean local authorities have limited powers to refuse to grant a licence. A licence must be issued by the local authority within two months (or longer by agreement between the parties) of the application providing the appropriate planning permission is in place, and providing the applicant has not had a site licence revoked within the previous three years.¹⁷ No other convictions, however relevant, may be taken into consideration. When a licence is issued, it is issued for an indefinite period unless the planning consent is time limited.

44. In order to comply with the requirements outlined above, a local authority is unable to require compliance with licence conditions prior to issuing a licence. However, local authorities can impose licence conditions as they deem appropriate, and in particular the 1960 Act permits conditions that include:

- Restricting the total number, type and location of caravans that may be situated on the site;
- Ensuring that there are adequate fire precautions, and adequate means of dealing with any outbreak of fire;
- Ensuring that there is adequate sanitation on the site.

45. In attaching conditions to a site licence, the local authority should have regard to the model standards for caravan sites issued from time to time by Welsh Ministers. The model standards are what should normally be expected as good practice on sites. They make provision for the layout, provision of facilities, and equipment for caravan sites. However, the standards can only be applied to new sites or sites that have been substantially redeveloped. They cannot be applied to existing sites that are already licensed.

46. Local authorities have limited enforcement powers under the 1960 Act should there be a breach of a licence condition. They have no power to serve enforcement notices, although they do have the power to prosecute. Summary conviction for breach of a licence condition carries a fine of up to level 4 on the standard scale, currently £2,500. When a site operator has been convicted for the third time of breaching a licence condition, the local authority can ask the court to revoke the licence.¹⁸

47. No caravan site licence is required where one of the exemptions outlined in Schedule 1 to the 1960 Act is applicable. The exemptions are:

- Use within curtilage of a dwellinghouse
- Use by a person travelling with a caravan for one or two nights

¹⁷ Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, s3(6)

¹⁸ Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, s9(2)

- Use of holdings of five acres or more in certain circumstances
- Sites occupied and supervised by exempted organisations
- Sites approved by exempted organisations
- Meetings organised by exempted organisations
- Agricultural and forestry workers
- Building and engineering sites
- Travelling showmen
- Sites occupied by licensing authority
- Gipsy sites occupied by county councils or regional councils

48. Every local authority is required to maintain a public register of licensed sites.¹⁹

49. All powers of enforcement conferred on local authorities under the 1960 Act are discretionary, and there is no obligation on a local authority to take any action.

A new licensing regime

50. This Bill will replace the existing licensing regime as it applies to residential mobile homes with a modern, fit for purpose, framework that can be consistently implemented across Wales. Local authorities will be the licensing authorities, as they are under the 1960 Act, but there will be a new statutory duty for them to consider exercising their powers of collaboration with other local authorities when licensing regulated sites. Such arrangements could allow expertise to be shared and costs to be reduced. It may also simplify record keeping requirements, such as details of licensed sites and copies of site rules.

51. Authorised agents or officers of licensing authorities will have powers of entry should they need to enter a regulated site for matters connected with licensing.

52. The Welsh Ministers will be required to lay regulations making provision for the procedures to be followed by licensing authorities in relation to the grant or refusal of licences, the variation of licences and the revocation of licences. The Welsh Ministers will also be able to issue guidance to licensing authorities on arrangements for the enforcement of licence conditions. Where necessary, and following service of a notice in writing upon the licence holder, the local authority will be able to carry out works to ensure compliance with a condition in the licence, and recover their costs from the licence holder. The licence holder will first be given reasonable time to carry out the works themselves.

53. Local authorities will be permitted to charge a fee for processing and issuing a site licence which will last for up to five years, but be renewable thereafter.. The Welsh Ministers may, by regulations, specify maximum fees that are to be charged, whether by specifying amounts or methods for calculating amounts.

54. As noted above, currently licensing authorities have no discretion to refuse an application. This Bill will permit a local authority to refuse to grant a licence where it is not satisfied as to certain matters outlined in the Bill. These matters are:

- The suitability of the site for stationing a maximum number of mobile homes;
- That the licence holder is a fit and proper person;
- That the proposed manager of the site is either the person having control of the site (i.e. the person who receives the pitch fees or any other periodic payments), or an agent or employee of that person;
- That the proposed manager of the site is a fit and proper person;
- That the proposed management arrangements are satisfactory.

55. When determining the suitability of a site, the local authority must ensure it meets any standards prescribed by regulations made by the Welsh Ministers for the stationing of that number of mobile homes.

56. It would be in the interests of the site operator to engage with the local authority before starting any works to the site after planning permission is granted.

57. The site licence must include a number of mandatory conditions. These require the licence holder to:

- Abide by the terms of the written statement;
- To enforce any site rules;
- To ensure that copies of the licence and the standard written statement are prominently displayed in an accessible place on the site;

- Refrain from any conduct, and not to permit any other person to engage in conduct, prohibited by virtue of section 3 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and
- To notify the local authority of any change relating to the information that they provided with their application that led to the grant of the licence.

58. The local authority may also include such further conditions as they see fit, but those conditions cannot apply to any person other than the owner, unless that person has consented to the imposition of those conditions.

59. Welsh Ministers may give guidance as to the form and content of such conditions, and local authorities must have regard to this guidance.

60. A site licence must include as annexes a copy of the written statement to be given to occupiers of the site under section 1 of the 1983 Act, and also a statement of any site rules that govern the conduct of residents or visitors to the site.

61. In order to be granted a licence the owner and manager (or other persons involved in the management of the site) will need to pass a “fit and proper” person test. It largely replicates the test that is applicable to owners/managers of Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) as set out in section 66 of the Housing Act 2004. However, it will also take into account the broader protected characteristics under section 4 of the Equality Act 2010.

62. There will be a duty on local authorities to request sufficient information from applicants for a licence to determine whether the licence holder and any person involved in the management of the site are fit and proper persons. This test will consider relevant criminal offences, contraventions of any provision of the law relating housing, landlord and tenant or town and country planning law, as well as any breaches of any code of practice or regulations made under provisions in this Bill that relate to the management of sites. It will be open to local authorities to request evidence of a person’s criminal convictions.

63. When determining whether the proposed management arrangements for the site are satisfactory, the authority must have regard (among other things) to:

- The competence of those persons to be involved in the management of the site;
- Whether any person proposed to be involved in the management of the site is a fit and proper person; and

- Whether the proposed management structures and funding arrangements are suitable.
64. The licensing authority must be informed if there is any change relating to the information contained in or provided with the application that led to the grant of the licence, and this includes a change of owner or manager. A licence may not be transferred to another person. Where a licence holder dies, the new owner will not become the licence holder automatically. However, for a period of 3 months beginning with the date of the owner's death, or the date on which a new person becomes the owner, the site is to be treated as if a temporary exemption notice is in force.
65. A licensing authority will have the power to exempt a site from any requirement to be licensed by issuing temporary exemption notices for further periods of 3 months. Either the personal representatives of the deceased owner or the new owner may request that such a notice is served.

Variation of licences

66. The licensing authority will be able to vary a licence where it is done with the agreement of the licence holder, or it discovers that there has been a change of circumstances since the licence was granted and this includes the discovery of new information.
67. Although the written statement will form part of the licence, the licensing authority may not vary its terms without the changes being approved under the procedure outlined in the 1983 Act. The same applies to the site rules, which may only be changed following consultation with occupiers and, if one exists, any qualifying residents' association, and it appears to the licensing authority that the majority of occupiers agree to the variation.

Revocation of licences

68. The Bill outlines a number of circumstances where the licensing authority may consider revoking a site licence either on its own initiative or, in certain cases, at the request of a qualifying residents association.
69. These circumstances are:
- With the agreement of the licence holder;
 - where the authority consider that the licence holder or any other person has committed a serious breach of a condition of the licence or repeated breaches of such a condition;

- where the authority no longer considers that the licence holder is a fit and proper person to be the owner of a regulated site; and
- where the authority no longer considers that the management of the site is being carried on by persons who are in each case fit and proper persons to be involved in its management;
- where the site to which the licence relates ceases to be a regulated site to which this Part applies; and
- where the authority considers at any time that, were the licence to expire at that time, it would, for a particular reason relating to the regulated site, refuse to grant a new licence to the licence holder on similar terms in respect of it.

70. When considering whether to revoke a licence on the grounds that the site is not reasonably suitable for the stationing of the maximum number of mobile homes specified in the licence, the Bill outlines what standards should be applied when making that determination. The licensing authority must apply the same standards when it is considering whether to revoke a site licence as were applicable when the licence was granted. However, where the standards applicable at the time have subsequently been revised or superseded by the provisions of regulations made by the Welsh Ministers, the licensing authority may apply the new standards.

71. As an alternative to revocation, the licensing authority may instead appoint an interim manager. The remuneration and expenses of the interim manager may be deducted from any income that the licence holder would be entitled to receive. If the income were insufficient, then the licence holder would be liable.

Register of licences

72. The local authority will be required to maintain a register of regulated site licences that are currently in force. This register must be available for inspection at the authority's main offices during normal office hours. This replaces and extends an existing duty under the 1960 Act.

Appeals

73. Site owners will have a right of appeal in relation to the decisions of licensing authorities to the Tribunal. Matters which may be appealed are:

- (a) refusal of licences,
- (b) the maximum number of mobile homes specified in a

- licence,
- (c) the duration of licences,
- (d) conditions included in licences, other than ones the licensing authority is under a statutory obligation to impose,
- (e) revocation of licences,
- (f) variation of licences,
- (g) refusals to serve temporary exemption notices,
- (h) the appointment of interim managers.

74. When considering appeals the Tribunal must make reference to statutory provisions and codes of conduct that are in force at the time when the appeal is determined. The Tribunal will have the power to direct the licensing authority to take whatever steps are necessary to give effect to the Tribunal's decision. The Welsh Ministers must make regulations outlining the procedures to be followed in relation to appeals, including the time within which appeals must be made.

Offences

75. It will be an offence for a site that should be licensed, not to be so licensed. In relation to sites that are duly licensed, it will be an offence to:

- Station more homes on the site than are permitted by the licence; or
- To knowingly cause or permit any failure to comply with any licence conditions.

76. Upon conviction in the magistrates' court a person is liable to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, currently £5,000. If the case is sent to the crown court, then the maximum punishment is an unlimited fine.

77. As an alternative to prosecution, a licensing authority may choose to give any person they believe has committed an offence the opportunity to discharge any liability for conviction for the offence by payment of a fixed penalty of £100. The Welsh Ministers will be able to change that amount by an order that will require the approval of the National Assembly under the affirmative procedure.

78. As noted above, officers of the licensing authority will have powers of entry in relation to site licensing. At present it is a criminal offence (according to Section 26(5) of the 1960 Act) wilfully to obstruct any authorised person from entering a site. This Bill will provide specific rights of entry that relate to licensing.

79. The maximum penalty is currently a level 1 (£200) fine; this is no longer an effective deterrent. In modern housing legislation the maximum fine for a similar obstruction is £2,500. There is no justifiable reason why the fine for obstruction of entry to a mobile homes site should be considerably less, and this Bill will make any person who wilfully obstructs any authorised person entering a site, including where a warrant has been issued, liable for a fine of up to level 4 on the standard scale, which is currently £2,500 and in line with other housing legislation.

Other consequences of operating unlicensed regulated sites

80. A repayment order system is to be established by the Bill, similar to rent repayment orders as set out under current Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) legislation, whereby site operators who sell homes and/or collect pitch fees for unlicensed sites may be ordered to repay all pitch fees and reasonable costs incurred. In the case of homes sold directly by site owners, this may include the purchase cost of the home and any commission paid to the site owner in respect of a sale. An application for a repayment order must be made by the occupier of a mobile home stationed on the site to the Tribunal. Repayment orders will only cover payments made within the period of 12 months ending with the date of the application to the Tribunal. The tribunal will have discretion to decide what amount of repayment is reasonable in the circumstances.

Management of regulated sites

81. The Bill allows Welsh Ministers to approve a code of practice with regard to the management of regulated sites. This code may be prepared by the Welsh Ministers themselves or another person.

82. Model Standards for caravan sites in Wales were issued under section 5 of the 1960 Act. Licensing authorities should refer to these standards when considering licence conditions for new or substantially redeveloped sites. This Bill will provide Welsh Ministers with powers to make provisions, by regulations, for ensuring that there are satisfactory management arrangements in place, and that those standards are maintained. Failure to comply with these regulations will constitute an offence, for which a person may be liable for a fine of up to level 5 on the standard scale, currently £5,000.

Residents' associations

83. Provisions for the recognition of a qualifying residents' association remain as present as set out in paragraph 28 of Schedule 1, Part 1, to the Mobile Homes Act 1983. However the Bill amends the 1983 Act to require a membership list, which should be up-to-date, to be presented to the licensing authority and not made public. The association's rules and constitution will also be held by the local authority, but these will be open to public inspection.

The sale and purchase of mobile homes

Current arrangements

84. Where the site operator sells a mobile home the prospective purchaser must be provided with a written statement of the terms under which they will occupy the pitch. This statement commonly becomes known as the written agreement once the home is actually purchased. A new written statement must be given every time the site operator agrees to sell a home directly to a purchaser. Different requirements apply where a prospective purchaser buys from an existing home owner and this is outlined below.
85. Mobile home residents own their home and rent the pitch from the site operator. It is an implied term of all written agreements that they are free to sell their home, subject to a number of statutory requirements. Where a home owner decides to sell their home they can also transfer their written agreement to the person who buys the home. The process of transferring the agreement in this way is known as assignment.
86. Home owners do not have to inform a site operator that they are selling their home. However, they must seek approval from the site operator of the proposed purchaser. This approval should not be unreasonably withheld but some site operators have been accused of exploiting this requirement and blocking sales for their own financial benefit. A legitimate reason for declining to approve a sale could be the age of the prospective purchaser, where the site rules specify a minimum age.
87. Consumer Focus Wales commissioned research submitted as part of the consultation on this Bill found that 41 per cent of residents who were interviewed as part of their recent research did not agree that people on their site could buy or sell their homes freely. It is difficult to precisely estimate how many actual sales have been blocked by undertaking surveys of current residents, because residents who had been under pressure previously, and left the site because of it, clearly cannot participate in the research.
88. There are incentives for unscrupulous site operators to "churn" their residents as this could provide increased commission payments and also redevelopment opportunities – particularly where a site operator buys a home from a resident. The Consumer Focus Wales research suggested that sales were being blocked so that homes could be bought at far less than market value, and then either sold on at a substantial profit or replaced by a new unit.

89. There is no requirement on the home owner or prospective purchaser to use a solicitor at any point during the sale or to arrange any kind of professional survey or valuation. This contrasts with purchases of bricks and mortar properties that usually involve mortgages where the mortgagee would insist on both a valuation and appropriate legal enquiries by a suitably qualified and insured person. Although specialist mortgages are available for the purchase of mobile homes, anecdotal evidence suggests many purchases are made without one.
90. Much of the responsibility for ensuring that the prospective purchaser is given full and accurate information about the purchase falls on the seller. The sellers could be held responsible if they provided false or misleading information about the mobile home or the site in order to induce the sale.
91. The site operator should respond to a request to approve the prospective purchaser within 28 days. If they do not respond then the seller can request that the Tribunal makes an order to approve the request. The site owner cannot insist on meeting the prospective buyer, but in many cases the buyers themselves may want to meet the site operator to ask questions about the site.
92. The site operator is entitled to commission on the sale of up to 10 per cent of the sale price. This is a limit prescribed in legislation.²⁰ Site operators are however free to charge a lower amount. The revenue generated by this commission forms an essential part of site operators' business plans. This was highlighted recently by the House of Commons Communities and Local Government Select Committee's inquiry in the mobile home industry. The Committee found that there was:

...no pressing reason to change the maximum commission that is paid to site owners on the sale of park homes. The commission is an important source of revenue for site owners and provides funding for properly managing and maintaining sites. Indeed, a change could disturb the balance between commission and pitch fees for many residents on fixed incomes.²¹

²⁰ The Mobile Homes (Commissions) Order 1983

²¹ Communities and Local Government Committee, Park Homes, 11 June 2012, HC 177-1, 2012-13, para 31

93. The 2001 research referred to above, found that if the entitlement to commission was removed, pitch fees would have to increase by around 22 per cent.²² For the reasons outlined above, this Bill is not proposing to remove the site owner's right to commission on sales.

New arrangements in this Bill

94. The requirement for the new owner to be approved by the site operator will be removed.
95. As site owners will no longer be involved in the sales process, there is a risk that sellers would not pay owners the 10 per cent commission as required by law, The Bill addresses this issue by ensuring that a sale or assignment does not take effect unless the site owner has received their commission.

Written agreements and site rules

96. The written agreement is the contract which allows a mobile home to be situated on a particular pitch. It is formed by a combination of implied terms which apply to all contracts by virtue of the 1983 Act, and express terms which are agreed between the parties. It is usual for the express terms to refer to site rules.
97. A new written agreement is made when a site operator sells a mobile home to a home owner, or allows a new person to bring their mobile home onto an existing pitch. Where a home owner chooses to sell their home, no new written agreement is made – the existing agreement is merely assigned to the new owner. This is similar to the way by which leasehold flats are sold. The current arrangements for the sale of Mobile Homes are set out in paragraph 8 of Schedule 1 to the 1983 Act.
98. This Bill will continue with the current arrangements, i.e. assignment of the agreement by the seller if the sale is by a home owner will continue to apply. If the sale is by the site operator, there will clearly be a new pitch agreement.

Site rules

99. Most mobile home parks will have site rules. Many sets of rules will include a minimum age requirement, and most will set out general management rules, for example, on keeping pets, car parking arrangements, refuse collection etc. Good site rules ensure that expectations are clear on all sides and disputes can be more easily resolved or avoided all together.

100. At present, site rules can form part of the written agreement and the procedures for making rules or changing existing ones can be included on the face of the agreement itself. This often happens as there is an industry model written agreement that includes a requirement to consult with home owners. However, not all site operators will use this agreement, and there is no statutory requirement for changes to site rules to be consulted on. Where the written agreement does not specify any procedure for changing site rules, home owners can be faced with uncertainty as to whether the new rules are binding or enforceable. While they could ask the Tribunal to determine this, this Bill seeks to clarify the law on this matter.
101. This Bill requires any site rules to be submitted with any licence application and any proposed changes to the rules by a site operator must be consulted on with the home owners and, if there is one, any qualifying residents' association. A change to the site rules will also have no effect unless it is notified to the home owners with a summary of the consultation response and (where appropriate) a copy of the Tribunal decision.
102. The Bill requires that the general terms set out in the written agreement, along with any site rules, must be deposited with the local authority and be made available for inspection by home owners and prospective purchasers referred to the licensing authority by a current owner alongside the site licence. If the site rules are not deposited in this way, the site operator will not be entitled to rely on them at all. Existing site rules will bind a new site operator until any changes have been consulted on and agreed between the site operator and home owners, or authorised by the Tribunal.
103. As site rules will form part of the licence, any variation will be subject to the requirements of this Bill, namely that there has been consultation with residents and, where one exists, a qualifying residents' association. The Welsh Ministers must make regulations that make provisions for the variation of any licence.
104. A new site operator would be required to apply for a licence, and the application would have to include rules. The rules would form part of the licence.

Joint ownership: rights and succession

105. Mobile homes are often owned jointly, for example, by married or cohabiting couples, couples in a civil partnership, family members or friends. In some instances only one of those owners is currently a signatory to the written agreement. This can lead to problems particularly if the person named on the written agreement moves into a care home or dies. For example, if the person named on the agreement dies, at present their co-owner may not be entitled to succeed to the written agreement, even though they jointly own the home.

106. This Bill will ensure that any person living in the mobile home as their only or main residence will be entitled to take over the agreement.

Pitch fees

107. Mobile home owners pay a fee in return for permission to site their home on a pitch – this is known as the pitch fee. Payment of the pitch fee will be a condition of the written agreement.

108. Pitch fees are determined at the inception of the agreement between the site operator and home owner. Unless there have been some relevant changes (which are outlined below), there is currently a presumption that the pitch fee can be increased or decreased annually by an amount equal to the increase or decrease in the Retail Prices Index (RPI). This is known as the pitch fee review and there would normally only be one per year. This Bill will substitute the Consumer Prices Index for the RPI. The review process is outlined in the terms implied into all agreements by virtue of Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983. When calculating any increase, or decrease, the site operator must take into account:

- Any authorised amounts spent on improvements to the site since the last review date. This means improvements that were the subject of consultation and the approval of home owners on the park;
- Any reduction in people’s ability to use the site since the last review date; and
- The effect of any relevant changes in the law that have come into force since the last review date.

109. Pitch fees can only be increased in respect of legislative changes which directly affect the actual costs of the management or maintenance of the site, and have taken effect within the 12 months since the last review date. This would not include more general changes such as those affecting tax, overheads or other business or head office activities, but would include matters such as, for example, enhanced environmental duties applicable to the site.

110. As an example of inappropriate increases to pitch fees, the Department for Communities and Local Government consultation notes that it is aware of a site operator trying to claim the costs of maternity pay through pitch fees, even though they had no pregnant staff working on the site.²³

111. This Bill makes it explicit that a site operator must not pass on any costs that are incurred by them in order to implement the changes to be made by this Bill, in the next or any future pitch fee review.

Improvement works to mobile homes

112. The recent Department of Communities and Local Government consultation highlights its concerns about some site operators being obstructive when a home owner is seeking to make internal alterations to their home. This particularly relates to adaptations for disabled occupants, some of which may be funded by a local authority Disabled Facilities Grant. The recent DCLG consultation gives another example where the installation of an accessible shower unit and permission to install a ramp for wheelchair access to the home has been refused.

113. The current law is not clear as to whether a home owner can make alterations of this kind without the consent of the site operator. This Bill clarifies that a home owner should generally be entitled to make any internal or external improvements to their home, so long as they do not carry out works to the mobile home which are prohibited under the terms of the agreement or by any enactment. Where the agreement requires the permission of the owner, that permission may not be unreasonably withheld. The site owner should not do or cause to be done anything that would affect their ability to carry out improvements, or interfere with the occupier's ability to do so.

Relocation of mobile homes

114. The site operator is entitled, under certain circumstances, to re-site a mobile home and when they do so the home owner has certain rights and protections. However, there have been cases of abuse, highlighted by the recent DCLG consultation, proving that the law is not sufficiently clear in this area. Therefore the law is to be clarified to specify that, unless there is agreement between the parties, a home can only be moved without the authorisation of the Residential Property Tribunal where the urgency of the need means that it is impractical to make an application before the mobile home is re-sited. An urgent relocation could be necessary in cases where, for example, there has been a sudden land slip. In the case of an urgent re-siting, where the mobile home has already been moved, the owner must immediately make an application to the Tribunal. The Tribunal must be satisfied of the need to re-site and that the new pitch is broadly comparable to the old one. If the Tribunal is not satisfied of this, then the mobile home must be returned to the original pitch.

The Residential Property Tribunal

115. The Residential Property Tribunal (RPT) is an independent quasi-judicial body constituted under the Rent Act 1977, and given its formal title by the Housing Act 2004. The RPT sets up Rent Assessment Committees and Rent Tribunals to consider appeals over rent levels and to fix an appropriate rent where there are disputes between landlords and tenants in the Private Rented Sector; and Leasehold Valuation Tribunals to settle certain disputes between leaseholders and freeholders. The RPT also adjudicates on a wide range of matters under the Housing Act 2004.
116. In 2008, the Welsh Government and Department for Communities and Local Government jointly consulted on whether disputes under the 1983 Act should be heard by the RPT rather than the courts.²⁴ The consultation suggested that there were a number of advantages in transferring jurisdiction over a range of mobile home disputes to the RPT including their informality and relatively low cost. The party making the application to the RPT will not have to pay the other sides costs, even if they lose the case. This is not the case when matters are dealt with by the courts.
117. Transfer of jurisdiction for a range of disputes under the Mobile Homes Act 1983 finally took place in March 2012.²⁵ Appeals from the RPT can be heard by the Upper Tribunal. However, the permission of the RPT or the Upper Tribunal is required for an appeal to be heard.

²⁵ Mobile Homes Act 1983 (Jurisdiction of Residential Property Tribunals) (Wales) Order 2012

118. The RPT will have jurisdiction over all disputes related to this Bill, aside from criminal prosecutions. Such prosecutions will still be heard by the courts.

4. Consultation by Peter Black AM

119. Peter Black AM launched a formal 8 week consultation on this Bill in May 2012. The consultation document posed 31 questions to all interested parties and stakeholders. Over 120 responses were received from a variety of stakeholders including home owners, residents' associations, site operators and their trade associations and local authorities.

120. The consultation demonstrated that the case for reform had become polarized, with home owners and local authorities broadly in favour of reform, and site operators broadly in favour of retaining the status quo. While there were some areas where a consensus emerged, such as the need to increase the financial penalties for those prosecuted for licence breaches, such areas were limited. All of the consultation responses are available on the National Assembly for Wales' website.

Summary

121. This consultation provoked considerable interest from a range of stakeholders with over 120 responses being received. Responses were received from:

- Residents/family members - 43
- Site operators/directors - 55
- Other stakeholders - 25

122. The responses broadly came from three main groups of stakeholders: mobile home owners and residents associations; site operators and their trade associations; and other stakeholders including local authorities. There were also two lengthy responses from Consumer Focus Wales – one based on research they had commissioned and another following an event they held for local authorities. No specific response was received from the WLGA. Other interested parties that responded included the Minister for Housing, Regeneration and Heritage, Huw Lewis AM, the Residential Property Tribunal (RPT), an Assembly Member, a Member of Parliament and the Older People's Commissioner. A full list of respondents, and all of the evidence they submitted, is available on the National Assembly's website.²⁶

123. Some of the headline issues that emerged from the consultation were:

- Home owners were overwhelmingly in favour of reform, and while there were a range of views on individual issues, there was solid support from this group for the general direction of the proposals outlined in the consultation document;
- Local authorities were in favour of reform, but anxious to ensure that any new regime takes adequate account of their role and resources;
- Site operators were generally hostile to many of the proposals, in particular they objected to the proposal to prevent them from passing on costs that they might incur as a result of this Bill to home owners;
- A significant number of holiday site operators responded to the consultation, and expressed concerns that the changes proposed by this Bill would affect their businesses, despite the assurances given in the consultation document that it would not. Holiday site owners also raised the issue of residential units for employees on their sites which could potentially bring these sites within the scope of this Bill.

124. Below is an analysis of responses by theme.

The Residential Property Tribunal

Transfer of jurisdiction to RPT

125. A majority of respondents that expressed a view felt that the RPT should have jurisdiction over disputes connected to this Bill. An advantage of this approach that was noted by many, in particular mobile home owners, was the lower cost and more informal approach when compared with the county court. One individual commented that the RPT would be “cheaper, faster and more focused than the courts”.

126. There was some concern that the RPT would not have the expertise necessary to deal with mobile home disputes, and reference was drawn to an individual's bad experience in a court where it was claimed a judge did not know the difference between a holiday caravan and a residential mobile home. However, one site operators' trade association indicated its willingness to become involved in training RPT members. Several respondents commented on what they saw as the inadequacy of the RPT's powers, such as not being able to enforce judgements.

127. The RPT itself provided a detailed response to the consultation and noted that its members do indeed have expert knowledge and experience of determining property related disputes. It therefore believes that it is appropriate that recourse would be to the RPT on a range of issues connected with this Bill.
128. A number of respondents commented that they supported the Bill's intention to retain the power for local authorities to bring criminal prosecutions in the courts. Several also commented that the termination of agreements should remain a matter for the courts, not the RPT. A site operators' trade association clearly stated that it did not support the transfer of any disputes between the local authority and site operator to the RPT.
129. A number of local authorities drew comparisons between the way the RPT in Wales operates and its equivalents in England, particularly with regard to the openness and transparency of decisions. RPT decisions in Wales are not published online as they are in England. This issue was also commented upon by a site operator who noted that if decisions in Wales were also published, potential home owners would be able to see which parks constantly appear before the Tribunal.

Damages and compensation

130. There was broad support from mobile home owners for the RPT to have power to award damages and compensation. A number of site operators, as well as a solicitor and the RPT itself, noted that to be fair the power to award compensation should apply equally to both site operators and home owners. As one site operator put it, the power should "work both ways". The RPT also queried whether this power would extend beyond breaches of the written agreement to also include breaches of site rules.
131. Consumer Focus Wales highlighted that in England, where the RPTs have had responsibility for determining a range of mobile home disputes for over a year, compensation has already been awarded in a number of cases. A number of respondents suggested that guidance should be issued to the RPT to enable it to effectively and consistently use this power.

132. However, there were a number of cautionary notes on this issue. One, from the Welsh Government, suggested that giving the RPT explicit powers to award damages and compensation could have wider legal implications. Another respondent commented that they would not wish to see the RPT replace the role civil courts have in this area.

Re-siting requests

133. There was a more mixed response on the issue of whether re-siting requests in the case of an emergency should have to be determined by the RPT. Most individuals who expressed a clear preference were in favour of the RPT having a role, but this was far from unanimous. Some felt that there could be a genuine emergency that would require an immediate response. Some examples that were given included fire, floods and ground collapses.
134. Site operators were largely content with the current arrangements with one commenting that they struck “the right balance”.
135. The RPT itself suggested that “it would be disproportionate to require consent in an emergency.” However, it went on to say that it accepted that that the interpretation of ‘emergency’ may be open to question.

Sale blocking

Experiences of sale blocking

136. There was an awareness of sale blocking by nearly all of the home owners that responded to the consultation, however, only a small number claimed to have experienced this first-hand. Most home owners that commented on this issue said that they knew of people that had been victims of sale blocking.
137. Site operators also acknowledged that this behaviour does happen on some sites, but stressed that there are a number of legitimate reasons why a site operator may wish to prevent a sale from going ahead using lawful means. One site operator noted that it dealt with around 250 assignments each year and that very few were prevented from going ahead. Some of the issues raised by site operators, and a number of home owners, were the age of the intended purchaser, whether they have pets and the age and condition of the mobile home itself.
138. Consumer Focus Wales suggested that some site operators were applying one set of rules for assignments and another for direct sales, with far stricter criteria being used on assignments for the sole purpose of blocking sales.

Reforming the law on sales

139. There was overwhelming support from home owners for removing the right of the site operator to veto a sale. Consumer Focus Wales believed that there was substantial evidence that a sale was often blocked so the site operator could purchase the home at a substantial discount, before then reselling it for a substantial profit.

140. A small number of home owners supported some sort of control on new residents, with concerns about anti-social behaviour being noted. A solicitor also commented that without proper controls on who was entering the site the value of residents' homes could be adversely affected.
141. Site operators saw the current system as fit for purpose, and noted the existing role of the RPT in dealing with sales, and that a decision to block a sale can already be challenged at the Tribunal. The requirement for a site operator to approve a sale was seen by many site operators as an opportunity to provide information to potential purchasers, many of whom will never have lived on a mobile home site before. There were also some concerns from site operators that removing them from the sales process entirely could mean the sale price is under-declared, and they therefore receive less commission.
142. One local authority noted that it often addresses licence breaches by requiring that the areas of non-compliance are addressed on the sale or assignment of the homes. It believes that removing the ability to prevent a sale could affect this approach.
143. The RPT itself preferred one of the other options put forward in the consultation document, where the buyer is deemed to be approved and if the site operator objects they could apply to the RPT for a ruling to that effect. The RPT suggests that any fee for making such an application should be "realistic and sufficient to require a site owner to fully consider their position before making one." The RPT also notes that it "...already has powers to dismiss vexatious applications and to award costs so there is a safeguard against spurious applications."

Meetings between all parties

144. The majority of home owners were strongly against any meeting with the site operator prior to the purchase. One of the main reasons given was that this was just a tactic to block a sale. Others suggested that it could be used to intimidate a potential purchaser. However, this was not the view of all home owners or residents associations, and some did support the idea, seeing it as an opportunity to deal with important paperwork and to iron out any issues of concern.
145. Site operators saw a meeting as an opportunity to explain site rules and other issues any potential buyer would need to be aware of. One trade association saw a meeting as an even more important safeguard should, as a result of this Bill, the site operator no longer be able to approve the purchaser.

Licensing

Views on current licensing regime

146. The majority of home owners that responded to the consultation felt that the existing licensing system needed to be modernised. One individual described it as “woefully inadequate and weak”, another as a “toothless tiger”. A number directed comments at local authorities who they felt should make better use of the existing powers that they have rather than simply allowing breaches of licence conditions to be “ignored”, with one suggesting that there should be a statutory requirement placed upon local authorities to enforce licence conditions. Consumer Focus Wales noted that many local authorities do not have accurate records of sites they have licensed, despite this being a statutory requirement.
147. A number of respondents had concerns that there was inconsistency in the approaches of different local authorities and some suggested that there could be an all-Wales body to implement a new licensing regime to provide more uniformity. In a similar vein, Consumer Focus Wales suggested that this role could be taken forward by appointing a lead local authority to co-ordinate all of the licensing work and information sharing.
148. Site operators were generally content with the current regime with one saying that it had “stood the test of time”. Another site operator, echoing concerns expressed by some home owners, said that if any changes were to be made, it should be that “rogues” are made to comply with licence conditions and, where necessary, licences should be updated. A solicitor suggested that the existing licensing regime could be made more effective rather than introducing “unnecessary and costly new procedures”.
149. A number of local authorities responded to the consultation, with one describing the current regime as “cumbersome and not effective” with prosecution the only enforcement option. However, another local authority noted that the existing legislation has been effective in helping to secure improvements to poorly maintained or managed sites. A third local authority felt that more use could be made of the 2008 model standards that currently only apply to new or substantially redeveloped sites.

150. Local authorities raised the issue of fire safety during a consultation event facilitated by Consumer Focus Wales, and that they are not clear where responsibility for enforcement lies – i.e. whether it is the responsibility of the local authority or the fire and rescue service. They suggested that new legislation could clarify this issue.
151. The issue of mixed holiday and residential sites was raised by a local authority concerned that this Bill does not specifically address this, nor does the Bill address those holiday sites effectively used as residential sites where residents vacate their homes for only a few weeks each year. This issue was also raised by an Assembly Member that responded to the consultation.
152. The issue of how the Bill would address the issue of residential units that are provided for staff use on holiday sites was also highlighted. There were substantial concerns from the holiday park sector that this Bill could impact directly upon them because of the existing shared licensing regime, despite the consultation document's promise not to. One holiday site operator emphasised that there was no need to change the current licensing system for holiday sites as the sector was very competitive and poor sites would simply go out of business.

Frequency of inspections and financing

153. There were a wide range of suggestions as to the frequency of site inspections, with annual inspections being a popular suggestion from home owners. A number of respondents also suggested that inspections should be unannounced if necessary, and this was supported by local authorities.
154. Site operators did not generally see a need for frequent inspections and a number suggested that inspection frequency should be risk-based rather than prescribed in law. This approach was supported by local authorities, a number of which noted that it mirrors the approach taken in other areas of regulation such as with trading standards, health and safety and food premises.
155. Many home owners suggested that licence fees could be used to fund inspections, with Consumer Focus Wales suggesting that local authorities should have the power to charge for inspections that were the result of an upheld reactive complaint.
156. Site operators did not see justification for additional fees to fund inspections, believing that local authorities should fund these from their own resources, which include council tax from home owners and business rates from site operators. One site operator suggested that inspections could be financed from fines levied on sites where licence conditions are breached.

Guidance on frequency and nature of inspections

157. There was broad support from home owners for the Welsh Government to issue guidance on the frequency and nature of inspections. Site operators were less enthusiastic on this issue, but thought that any guidance that was developed should be done so in partnership with the industry. Local authorities were also generally supportive, although again emphasising that there should be a risk-based approach to inspections.

Licence conditions

158. There were a wide range of suggestions for possible licence conditions with many focusing on health and safety and specific issues of concern such as utilities. The current Model Standards were mentioned in a number of responses as a basis for licence conditions. Many home owners wanted very extensive conditions, but the benefit of a concise licence was noted by the secretary of a residents' association who felt this gave less opportunity for "unscrupulous owners to use parts of the licence to scare, intimidate or force people from their homes".

159. Site operators were anxious not to have rigid licence conditions that did not allow for some degree of local flexibility a point echoed by some local authorities.

Duration of licence

160. Suggestions for the duration of licences from home owners and local authorities varied from between 1 to 5 years, or shorter if the circumstances warranted it. For example, where there had been particular issues of concern at the park or the site operator was new to the industry.

161. Site operators were opposed to any fixed term licence. They saw this as both a threat to the security of home owners and also a threat to their financial viability. A number of responses, primarily from owners of holiday sites, stated that the introduction of a fixed term licence would "completely undermine the economics" of their business. They had particular concerns about lenders willingness to invest in a business whose right to trade could simply expire, and the potential impact upon home owners' security of tenure and ability to sell their home. However, they saw no objection to the licence being periodically reviewed by the local authority based on a risk assessment.

162. A national body representing park home residents, the Independent Park Home Advisory Service (IPHAS), also had concerns about having fixed term licences, in particular they believe that home owners would lose security of tenure should the licence expire. They saw the potential for site operators to use the imminent expiry of a licence as a “weapon” that could be used against home owners. The site operator could, for example, threaten not to renew the licence if the home owner complained to the local authority. IPHAS would prefer the licence to remain in force until ownership of the site changed hands.

Fees for licensing

163. There were a variety of methodologies put forward for calculating licence fees, many local authorities preferred straightforward methods based on the cost of inspection to the local authority and the number of pitches. There was some support from local authorities for a “national set fee” which could be set by regulation.

164. Site operators again reiterated their opposition to licence fees, and felt that their contributions through business rates and other taxes, in addition to council tax from home owners, should be sufficient to finance the cost of licensing. Emphasising their belief that there should be no fee for licensing, one site operator noted that parks do not receive some services that other businesses would expect such as road maintenance and street lighting.

Annual charges

165. There was a mixed response to the proposal that there should be an annual charge. While a number of home owners supported this idea, many felt the licence fee should be sufficient. Local authorities were strongly opposed to the idea of an annual fee as they saw this as further bureaucracy, and pursuing non-payment could potentially take up a significant amount of resources and officer time.

166. Site operators saw no justification for an annual fee which they believed would result in good sites paying for enforcement on poorly managed sites.

Fit and proper person test (FPPT)

167. There was substantial support from home owners and local authorities for a fit and proper person test to be introduced for site operators. Many of the responses from home owners called for an Enhanced Criminal Records Bureau check rather than the basic one proposed in the consultation so that all “spent” convictions were disclosed on the basis that home owners were often older people that would be regarded as vulnerable. Two local authorities made reference to Disclosure Scotland basic disclosures (which do not disclose those convictions considered spent under the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974) already being requested by some local authorities dealing with HMO licence applications.

168. It was also suggested by local authorities that attended the Consumer Focus Wales event that the directors of any company that owns the site, and the person with whom home owners have direct dealings with (e.g. the site manager) should undergo the same checks.
169. Site operators expressed mixed views on this issue. While some had no objection in principle to this proposal, there were queries such as how far back the checks would go and would this sort of check be applied to other businesses? The issue of what would happen should a licence be revoked if a person failed to meet the fit and proper person criteria was also raised. A site operators' trade association suggested separating the site licence which would deal with infrastructure from a personal licence to manage the site, a point echoed by a residents' association. They suggested that a central Wales-wide body could deal with personal licences and this would deal with the issue of one person owning a number of sites in different areas. Local authorities could retain responsibility for the physical inspection of sites.
170. It was noted by a holiday site operator that many owners and employees on these sites already have to pass a variety of fit and proper person tests as part of other licensing regimes, such as alcohol licensing, gambling and financial services.

Other issues relevant to FPPT

171. Many home owners wanted a wide range of issues to be taken into account, including the opinions of site residents. Amongst the more popular suggestions from home owners were complaints made to the local authority and a history of harassment or sale blocking. A number suggested that there should be some consideration given to the financial resources and financial background of the site operator.
172. Local authorities were keen to consider any record of enforcement action, including referrals to the RPT. The RPT saw itself as a potential arbitrator should a site operator be deemed not to be a fit and proper person.

Fines

173. There was a general consensus from across the whole spectrum of respondents that the current level of fine was not an effective deterrent. Many site operators felt that the fine “should be proportionate to the gravity of the offence”. A number of home owners called for unlimited fines.

Fixed penalty notices

174. There was a substantial amount of support for fixed penalty notices from home owners, with agreement that these should be for minor breaches of licence conditions.

175. Site owners had various concerns about this type of notice, including that they could just be used by local authorities as a way of raising extra revenue, and that there would not necessarily be any judicial oversight of the process.

176. Some local authorities saw some merit in the proposal, with one suggesting this type of notice could be appropriate for licence breaches that could be easily remedied. However, as with annual fees, local authorities highlighted a potential administrative burden in collecting unpaid fines. Some local authorities saw other means of enforcement as potentially more effective than fixed penalty notices.

Enforcement notices and works in default

177. There was broad agreement that local authorities should have a greater range of enforcement options available to them and that this should include enforcement notices and an ability to carry out works in default. One local authority commented that “tools other than prosecution” were what they needed. Another local authority felt that it was important that they should be able to instigate a prosecution should a notice not be complied with. A third local authority, while supporting the principle of enforcement notices, felt that this should only be a power, and not a requirement.

178. While site operators generally supported the proposal, one did feel that an enforcement notice should only be “limited to instances of repeated and flagrant breach”. Another commented that if the current licensing regime allowed for such notices there would be no need for this consultation.

When to revoke a licence

179. It was generally agreed that a licence should only be revoked in the most extreme cases of licence breaches, including where a site operator no longer meets fit and proper person criteria. It was noted by a number of respondents that there would be serious implications for home owners should their licence be breached, for example frustrating sales that may be imminent.

Local authority management orders

180. As noted above, respondents generally saw the revocation of a licence as a last resort, and in these circumstances it may be necessary for the local authority to take over the management of a site.
181. Local authorities saw some practical difficulties, with one noting that there would probably be a substantial amount of work to be carried out on a site where this took place. Another local authority commented that a local authority would not have the practical experience necessary to undertake this. Several local authorities paralleled experience of dealing with management orders in relation to HMOs, and noted how resource intensive this was.
182. Consumer Focus Wales suggested that a Registered Social Landlord could take the role of manager.

Residents taking over management

183. There were mixed views from home owners on them being given the power to take over the management of a site. However, many believed that there would either not be enough interest from home owners, or practical difficulties may be difficult to overcome. A number of respondents suggested that some home owners or particular “factions” on the site may be more interested in furthering their own interests, rather than taking decisions that would benefit the park as a whole. Site operators were opposed to this proposition.
184. If home owners were to take over the management of a site, a number of respondents commented that they should be expected to meet all of the standards of the site operator, including passing a fit and proper person test.

Written agreements and site rules

Consultation requirements

185. A number of respondents suggested written notice of proposed changes, and a statutory period of consultation. Consumer Focus Wales suggested that the consultation requirements could be set out in regulations, with CIH Cymru suggesting that any consultation should address barriers faced by anyone with protected characteristics as defined in the Equality Act 2010. A number of respondents suggested involving any Residents' Association in the consultation process and holding public meetings.

186. A number of site operators believed that the existing provisions on changes to express terms were sufficient.

Pitch fees

Regulation

187. The majority of home owners believed that pitch fees should be regulated, and a number suggested that the increase should be linked to the Consumer Prices Index (CPI) rather than the currently higher Retail Prices Index (RPI). One reason given for this was that pensions are linked to CPI, and most mobile home owners are pensioners. A number of respondents asked for more clarity on pitch fee review notices. An anonymous response suggested that some older sites have deteriorated in quality because pitch fee increases have not been sufficient to pay for maintenance.

188. Site operators were generally content with the current system for pitch fee reviews. On the specific issue of CPI versus RPI, a trade association commented that it is necessary for a business to remain viable, echoing the words of English housing minister Grant Shapps when he gave evidence to the Communities and Local Government select committee at the House of Commons. Another trade association said it would welcome more clarity in how pitch fees are calculated and this could be by means of an annual statement.

189. Consumer Focus Wales commented that site operators must be prevented from using legislative changes to increase the pitch fee, unless those legislative changes can be directly proven to affect the management or maintenance costs of the site. However, they did not believe that changes as a result of this Bill should be passed on to home owners.

Other comments on pitch fees

190. It was clear from the consultation responses that a number of respondents had direct experience of issues connected with pitch fees. A number of issues were raised including, the clarity of the pitch fee review notice and differences in charges between homes on the same park.

Improvements and alterations

Maintenance and repairing obligations

191. There was general agreement from home owners that clarification of site operators' repairing and maintenance obligations would be a positive step, with a number also commenting that a clearer definition of the difference between repairs and improvements would also benefit all parties. However, as a site operators' trade association commented, it is not always straightforward to make this distinction. For example, they queried whether replacing an old electrical system is a repair or an improvement.

Consultation on proposed improvements and alterations

192. There was strong support for a standard consultation format from home owners. However, site operators were content with the current arrangements as set out in the Mobile Homes Act 1983 and in existing park agreements.

193. One local authority pointed out that some improvements could be required as a result of licence conditions.

Internal improvements and alterations

194. Most home owners were adamant that internal improvements should be the sole responsibility of the home owner. However, some site operators and local authorities, as well as a small number of home owners, raised health and safety issues, as well as potential breaches of licence conditions as a reason why the site operator may need to be aware of alterations. Examples given included the installation of fixed heating appliances, sub dividing accommodation, an alteration that would affect the mobility of the unit and installing electrical appliances that could affect the electricity supply to the rest of the park. A local authority suggested that internal alterations that could be carried out without approval should be limited to decorative or replacement like for like works only.

External improvements and alterations

195. There was much more of a consensus on external alterations, with many respondents from all sides suggesting that anything that would result in a breach of the site licence being grounds for refusing permission. Fire safety and privacy concerns were also raised as issues that should be considered when considering whether to give permission.

Succession

196. There was strong support from home owners for the proposals to modernise the rules on succession. Site operators and their trade bodies were more cautious, with some content with the status quo, and others seeing scope for modernisation.

197. Many respondents, representing both home owners and site operators, highlighted the potential complexity of this area.

Financial impact of the Bill

198. The main concern of home owners was that the potential costs of this Bill would ultimately fall on them through higher pitch fees.
199. Local authorities saw additional costs from their enhanced enforcement powers and duties, but saw licence fees as an opportunity to make the new licensing scheme self-financing or at least contribute towards these costs. There were also some concerns raised about initial setup costs, and awareness raising costs.
200. Site operators saw a potentially significant financial impact upon their business and felt that these costs should be passed on to home owners through pitch fees. They also thought that local authorities should be able to absorb more of the additional costs from their existing resources which include a significant contribution from both site operators and home owners through various taxes. A number of site operators highlighted the fact that parks do not receive a number of services that most businesses and council tax payers receive such as road maintenance and street lighting.
201. Site operators strongly objected to the proposal that they should not be permitted to pass on any of the costs of this Bill to home owners, and if this was not allowed it could impact upon the viability of their business. However, a number of site operators also highlighted that it was difficult to be precise when calculating the impact of this Bill on their business as there were so many variables/possibilities at this stage. On balance, site operators saw the potential for this Bill to disproportionately affect them.
202. The Residential Property Tribunal saw a considerable impact on the Tribunal should the Bill become law. It noted that in recent years costs to the Tribunal have increased and there already exists considerable pressure on the budget, members time and staff resources. It also noted that consideration would have to be given to staff training and fees that would be charged when making applications to the RPT.

Other issues

203. A number of issues not directly consulted on were raised in the consultation responses. A number of home owners objected to the 10 per cent commission that is paid to the site operator on the sale of a home. However, a number of site operators were equally certain that the commission was an essential part of their business plans.

204. A number of home owners suggested that “park home” should be a legal term rather than “mobile home”.

205. There were a number of calls for an information hub, available online and by telephone, to be funded by the Welsh Government so there was a central source of information on mobile homes, particularly on the buying and selling process.

206. A number of home owners raised the issue of fair utility bills, and the right to have a water meter, and asked for these issues to be considered when drafting the Bill.

Transitional Provisions

207. Much of the current legislation applies to all forms of caravan sites.

The arrangements proposed in this Bill will make substantial changes to the law relating to residential mobile home sites. Transitional Provisions will be required to explain how holders of licences under the current arrangements are to transfer to the new regime. Other parts of the Bill are more self-contained, and should be capable of being implemented more quickly. Those relating to pitch fees, for example, may be implemented more quickly, but transitional arrangements will need to specify whether changes take effect from a certain date, or from the next review.

Implementation timescale

208. In order to implement this Bill effectively, Welsh Ministers will need to put in place a number of pieces of subordinate legislation as explained in Part 5 of this Explanatory Memorandum, Local authorities will also need to put in place appropriate administrative arrangements. As these are matters outside the control of the Member in Charge of the Bill, no firm timescale can be established at this stage, though a period of 12-24 months would appear reasonable.

5. Power to make subordinate legislation

209. The Bill contains provisions to make subordinate legislation. The following table sets out in relation to each provision:

- the person upon whom, or the body upon which, the power is conferred;
- the form in which the power is to be exercised;

- the appropriateness of the delegated power; and
- the applied procedure (affirmative, negative, no procedure), if any, together with the reasons why it is considered appropriate;

Section	Power conferred on	Form	Appropriateness	Procedure/reasons
Section 5(1)(c) (Requirement for regulated sites to be licensed)	Welsh Ministers	Order	Suitable for orders as it will enable Ministers to respond to unusual or unexpected situations	Negative procedure applies as this will not affect the principles established by the Bill
Section 6(8) (Applications for licences)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it relates to procedural matters – form of application, information to be provided, maximum level of fees and circumstances when no fees are required or they are repayable	Negative procedure applies as these are procedural matters and no issues of principle are involved
Section 8(3) (Tests as to suitability for the stationing of mobile homes)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it relates to technical matters – the number of mobile homes appropriate for sites of particular sizes and characteristics	Negative procedure applies as these are procedural matters and no issues of principle are involved
Section 10(5) (Licence conditions)	Welsh Ministers	Guidance	Suitable for guidance as it relates to the form and content of conditions – it will permit the development of consistency and best practice on these subjects	No procedure applies as no formal legal requirements will be created

			without imposing legally binding requirements
Section 13(1)(d) (Revocation of licences)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it will enable Welsh Ministers to respond to developments that adversely affect home owners without the need for further primary legislation	Negative procedure applies. This maintains consistency with the corresponding legislation on Homes in Multiple Occupation
Section 15 (Procedures relating to licences)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it relates to procedural matters relating to the grant, refusal, variation and revocation of licences	Negative procedure applies as these are procedural matters and no issues of principle are involved
Section 16(4) (Appeals and other determinations)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it relates to procedural matters relating to appeals and other determinations	Negative procedure applies as these are procedural matters and no issues of principle are involved
Section 17 (Enforcement)	Welsh Ministers	Guidance	Suitable for guidance as it relates to the arrangements for enforcement – it will permit the development of consistency and best practice on this subject without imposing legally binding requirements	No procedure applies as no formal legal requirements will be created
Section 23(8) (Fixed Penalties)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as it	Negative procedure

			relates to procedural matters relating to the form of the fixed penalty notice	applies as this is a procedural matter and no issues of principle are involved
Section 24(2) (Amount of fixed penalty)	Welsh Ministers	Order	Suitable for orders as this is a sum of money which may need to be varied from time to time without the need for primary legislation	Affirmative procedure applies as this will amend a sum of money shown on the face of the Bill
Section 28(1) Approval of codes of practice with regard to the management of regulated sites	Welsh Ministers	Order	Suitable for orders as this relates to the approval of a Code of Practice relating to the management of regulated sites	Negative procedure applies as failure to comply with the Code will not of itself make a person liable to civil or criminal proceedings. The section also contains specific requirements regarding consultation and publication
Section 29(1) (Management regulations in respect of regulated sites)	Welsh Ministers	Regulations	Suitable for regulations as the purpose is to ensure that practical management arrangements are in place to achieve the objectives set out in subsection (2)	Negative procedure applies as the regulations are to deal with detailed managerial issues, the objectives being set out in subsection (2)
Section 31(2)(c) (Orders)	Welsh Ministers	Orders	Suitable for orders as incidental, supplementary, transitory,	The same procedure will apply as to the principal power to which it transitional and saving provisions will be required for the introduction of a new regulatory regime.	relates as explained in each case above.

Section 31(3) (Orders and regulations)	Welsh Ministers	Orders and regulations	Suitable for orders and regulations as further provision (including matters of detail) may be required for the introduction of a new regulatory regime.	Negative procedure applies as this intended to ensure full implementation of the Bill and the power is limited to necessary or expedient for the general purposes, or any particular purposes, of this Bill, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to, any provision made by this Bill
Section 33(2) (Commencement)	Welsh Ministers	Order	Suitable for orders as a commencement date cannot be fixed until the implementing regulations and structure have been put in place	No procedure – in accordance with normal legislative practice
Schedule, paragraph 4(2) (rate of Commission)	Welsh Ministers	Order	Suitable for orders as this a is a restatement of the current law	Negative procedure – in accordance with current legislation

6. Territorial application

210. This Bill will apply only to residential mobile homes situated on protected sites in Wales. This Bill will also apply to the sites themselves.

7. Cross border issues

211. As the Bill applies to regulated home sites in Wales, there are no direct cross-border issues in the Bill. Nevertheless, there may be a need for regulations and guidance to address matters such as the exchange of information with local authorities outside Wales regarding site owners and managers who operate sites in Wales and beyond.

Part 2: Regulatory Impact Assessment

212. Official data on the sector is scarce, and until recently a 2002 survey commissioned by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (now the Department for Communities and Local Government) provided the bulk of robust data. Census data only provide limited scope for further analysis as mobile homes are not identified as a distinct form of housing in the census questionnaire, they are instead included within a wider category that includes other temporary structures.

213. Recent research by Consumer Focus Wales provides the most up-to-date data on the sector, and they have shared some of their findings so as to assist with the preparation of this explanatory memorandum.

214. The mobile home sector in Wales is small, comprising approximately 3,400 homes on 92 sites.²⁷ This equates to less than 0.3 per cent of the total housing stock in Wales.²⁸ The majority of sites have pitches for fewer than 50 mobile homes, while eight sites have over 100 pitches.²⁹ Just under one third of sites are corporately owned.

215. The options considered are:

- Option 1: Do nothing
- Option 2: Voluntary arrangement
- Option 3: Introduce the proposed Bill

Estimate of Costs: Option 1 – do nothing – continue with existing arrangements.

216. There is broad agreement from mobile home owners that the measures within this Bill should be implemented. This is evidenced by the response to the consultation held by Peter Black, the research carried out by Consumer Focus Wales and also by the House of Commons Communities and Local Government Select Committee inquiry into park homes. However, it is recognised that there is considerable opposition to reform from site operators and their trade associations, many of whom would prefer to retain the current licensing regime.

217. The current licensing system, which includes criminal penalties, is openly flouted by a minority of site owners who engage in dubious practices, and there is no reason to believe this will change unless the law is strengthened. While this does mean extra regulation for all site owners, including the majority who manage their sites well, this is a necessary step to protect mobile home owners.

²⁷ CFW 2012

²⁸ There are approximately 1.3 million homes in Wales.

²⁹ CFW 2012

218. As has been stated previously, local authorities are unable to charge for their mobile home licensing functions under current legislation. They therefore receive no direct contribution from site operators towards the costs associated in dealing with duties under the 1960 Act. If this Bill does not become law, these costs will continue to fall upon council tax payers and the local authority's general resources provided by the Welsh Government. The inability of local authorities to charge may deter some authorities from intervening where breaches of licences are identified, or indeed from undertaking regular monitoring.

219. The consultation held by Peter Black highlighted that a number of local authorities do already undertake regular inspections of sites within their areas, but this does not happen in all areas. The new regime proposed by this Bill will ensure that regular inspections are carried out, and licences renewed at least every five years. In the absence of these provisions there is a risk that in some areas there will be few, if any, inspections to ensure that physical and management standards are being maintained.

Estimate of Costs: Option 2 – Voluntary arrangement

220. Consideration was given to whether a voluntary arrangement, such as the Landlord Accreditation Wales model, could be agreed that would meet the needs of the Bill without the need for legislation.

221. However, the issues giving rise to this Bill would not be addressed by a voluntary arrangement as the sites likely to sign up to such an agreement would be likely to exclude the minority of sites where dubious practices take place.

222. Hence the impact would be negligible.

Estimate of Costs: Option 3 – Introduce a proposed Bill

223. The new proposals would impose a number of new costs on site owners, licensing authorities, the Residential Property Tribunal and the Welsh Government. The Bill specifically prevents site owners from passing on costs associated with this Bill to mobile home owners.

224. There are fourteen regulation and order-making powers within this Bill and therefore the financial cost of the Bill will be very much dependent on how and when these powers are implemented. The following sections set out indicative costings around the intention of the Bill. It is anticipated that more detailed estimates will be available when regulations are drafted and consulted upon.

A new licensing regime

225. This Bill will replace the existing licensing regime as it applies to residential mobile homes with a modern framework that is both fit for purpose and consistently implemented across Wales. Local authorities will be the licensing authorities, as they are under the 1960 Act.

226. The Welsh Ministers will be required to make regulations making provision for the procedures to be followed by licensing authorities in relation to the grant or refusal of licences, the variation of licences and the revocation of licences. The Welsh Ministers will also be able to issue guidance to licensing authorities on arrangements for the enforcement of licence conditions. Where necessary, and following service of a notice in writing upon the licence holder, the licensing authority will be able to carry out works to ensure compliance with a condition in the licence, and recover their costs from the licence holder. The licence holder will first be given reasonable time to carry out the works themselves. Licensing authorities will be permitted to charge a fee for processing and issuing a site licence which will be renewable at least every five years.

227. The site licence must include a number of mandatory conditions, as set out in Section 57 of this Explanatory Memorandum. The licensing authority may also include such further conditions as they see fit, but those conditions cannot apply to any person other than the owner, unless that person has consented to the imposition of those conditions.

228. Welsh Ministers may give guidance as to the form and content of such conditions, and licensing authorities must have regard to this guidance.

229. Welsh Ministers may issue guidance as to the appropriate level of fees, and have the power to make regulations to fix a maximum if they consider that to be appropriate. For illustrative purposes an example is set out below, this example assumes that the fee is based on the number of units on a site and following consultation responses, there would be no annual fee charged. A few examples of income follow, based on the facts that there are 92 sites in Wales with around 3,400 units. If a fee were set based on the number of units then the following licence fees could be raised over 5 years.

Fee per unit £	Licence fee income from 92 sites £
50	170,000
100	340,000
150	510,000
200	680,000

This is simply a transfer from site owners to licensing authorities and so not a net economic cost.

230. In order to be granted a licence the owner and manager (or other persons involved in the management of the site) will need to pass a “fit and proper” person test. There will be a duty on licensing authorities to obtain sufficient information from applicants for a licence to determine whether the licence holder and any person involved in the management of the site are fit and proper persons. Licensing authorities must have regard to any relevant criminal offences, contraventions of any provision of the law relating to equality, housing, landlord and tenant or town and country planning law, as well as any breaches of any code of practice or regulations made under provisions in this Bill that relate to the management of sites. It will be open to licensing authorities to request evidence of a person’s criminal convictions.
231. There would be administrative costs to the site owner in relation to additional work needed for the licence application and we have included an estimation of £100 per site to cover this. This would lead to a cost of £9,200 over 5 years (£100 * 92) and more if a local authority decides to grant a licence for a shorter period. Also, if a local authority requires evidence of criminal convictions, a Disclosure Scotland Criminal Conviction Certificate costs around £25, a standard CRB check costs around £26 and an enhanced CRB check £44. If we were to assume that on average three checks were carried out per site, the cost of carrying out criminal checks for all 92 sites would be in the region of £7,000 and £12,000 depending on the check required to be carried out by the licensing authority.
232. Local authorities with park homes sites within their areas currently license and inspect, to varying degrees, these sites. The new system of licensing would be considerably different with regulations set by Welsh Ministers and there is potential for collaborative service delivery and economies of scale.
233. A licence may not be transferred to another person. Where a licence holder dies, the new owner will not become the licence holder automatically. However, for a period of three months beginning with the date of the owner's death, or the date on which a new person becomes the owner, the site is to be treated as if a temporary exemption notice is in force. The initial three month period of exemption may be renewed by the licensing authority for further periods, each of three months duration.

234. The proposed Bill also contains a power to appoint an interim manager of a site. It is estimated, based on appointing a manager at senior level that the potential cost to the licensing authority of securing a replacement could be approximately £10,000. The full cost of employing the interim manager would come from site revenue. However it is hoped that such an intervention would only ever be considered as a last resort, and used only rarely. The consultation responses indicated that the limited experience local authorities have of dealing with Houses in Multiple Occupation management orders would lead them to only use this power only in extreme circumstances. Moreover, the enhanced regulatory powers contained in this Bill should enable a local authority to intervene at an early stage when problems are identified, before it becomes necessary to consider the appointment of an interim manager.
235. The licensing authority will be required to maintain a register of regulated site licences that are currently in force. This must be available for public inspection.
236. How services are organized on a local, regional or national level should not be directed by this Bill. We have assumed in the first year that to process the 92 new site licenses in Wales would take a combined resource of around four (full time equivalent) environmental health officer (EHOs), this would assume that two licence applications and associated work could be processed per officer per month, allowing time for interaction with site owners as part of the application process, to minimise the number of potential appeals. If the cost of an EHO is assumed to be £40,000 this would be a combined cost of £160,000 in the first year, this would assume all licences would be processed within one year of policy implementation, if this was not the case these costs would be spread over a longer period. Their role would include setting up registers of licences.
237. As part of work by the Welsh Government to determine regulations around licensing, further modelling work would need to be done to calculate more definite costs including time taken to undertake inspections and administrative work associated with this.

Variation of licences, site rules and agreements

238. Although the written statement will form part of the licence, the licensing authority may not vary its terms without the changes being approved under the procedure outlined in the 1983 Act. The same applies to the site rules, which may only be changed following consultation with occupiers and, if one exists, any qualifying residents' association, and it appears to the licensing authority that the majority of occupiers agree to the variation.
239. If it is assumed that 10% of site owners need to make some form of amendment to the site rules, agreement or licence each year and this would have an administrative cost of around £250 to the site owner, including a possible requirement to consult with residents. This would lead to a cost of £2,300 a year (£250*9.2). Section 6(9) would permit lower fees when it is the licence holder only that is being considered and not the site.

Fines and Penalties

240. The Bill introduces a system of fines and fixed penalty notices, for offences such as breaches of site licence conditions, these conditions will be determined by the Welsh Government and local authorities. The intention of the new regulatory framework is that these powers are only exercised as a last resort and will be a rare occurrence. The relationship model being applied will allow for early intervention in order to address issues through voluntary undertaking. Any income in relation to fixed penalties would be retained by the licensing authority, whereas income from fines imposed by the courts would be passed on to the Treasury – however, in cases of successful prosecution, local authorities can apply to the court for costs to be payable in relation to preparatory and court costs. Therefore cost and income to the licensing authority is not included.
241. Costs falling on site owners in relation to fines or fixed penalty notices have not been included in these cost estimates, as these will only come into force as a reaction to criminal activity by site owner / management rather than due to the Bill itself.
242. The penalty structure is as follows. Upon conviction in the magistrates' court a person is liable to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, currently £5,000 (except in the case of obstruction, for which see below). If the case is sent to the crown court, then the maximum punishment is an unlimited fine.
243. As an alternative to prosecution, a licensing authority may choose to give any person they believe has committed an offence the opportunity to discharge any liability for conviction for the offence by payment of a fixed penalty of £100. The Welsh Ministers will be able to change that amount by order which would have to be approved by the National Assembly.

244. This Bill will make any person who wilfully obstructs any authorised person entering a site, including where a warrant has been issued, liable for a fine of up to level 4 on the standard scale, which is currently £2,500 and in line with other housing legislation.

Monitoring of sites

245. This Bill will provide Welsh Ministers with powers to make provisions, by regulations, for ensuring that there are satisfactory management arrangements in place, and that those standards are maintained. Following consultation responses it is not suggested that routine inspections should be charged for.

246. Local authorities currently monitor and inspect sites so the additional burden of this legislation is limited. In response to the consultation two local authorities mentioned inspection frequency:

The City and County of Swansea Council stated that “We inspect sites annually on a routine basis with visits in response to queries”

The Vale of Glamorgan Public Protection Service stated that “The Council officers currently regularly inspect licensed site to ensure compliance with site licence condition”

247. Costs would be dependent on the number of routine inspections required, it was suggested in consultation that the frequency of inspection should be subject to a risk based assessment, Consumer Focus Wales has suggested “a five year licence with a full inspection every two and half years. When there’s a breach, officers should go back more often and could charge the park owners for the inspection”. We have assumed that any new monitoring and general administrative requirements would need the resource input of two full-time equivalent technical officers, or around 5 person days input per site per year. If the cost of a technical officer is approximately £30,000 per year, the annual cost of this would be £60,000 per year from year 2 onwards. This would include processing any variations to existing licences, maintaining registers of licences, along with holding the required information on residents’ associations and site rules.

248. A different need in relation to monitoring by licensing authorities may require site owners to spend more time to provide evidence that the site is up to standard. We have assumed that this will involve a cost of £100 a year per site from year 2 onwards, based on administrative time collating information that the site owner will already hold, totaling £9,200 per year.

Residents' Associations

249. The Bill amends the 1983 Act to require a membership list, which should be up-to-date, to be presented to the licensing authority and not made public. The association's rules and constitution will also be held by the licensing authority, but these will be open to public inspection. It is assumed that costs to Residents' Associations of this requirement will be too small to be significant. For example, if a change to a membership list is made notifying the licensing authority may involve printing and sending off a copy of the list or possibly correspondence by email.

The sale and purchase of mobile homes, changes and relocation

250. The Bill removes the requirement for the new owner to be approved by the site owner. This change will not lead to an increase in costs. The likely impacts are less administrative burden on site owners and less potential for conflict and legal cases due to alleged sale blocking.

251. Similarly the clarifications in terms of joint ownership, rights and succession will have no financial impacts.

252. The clarification of law in terms of entitlement to make internal and external improvements to their home and clarifications around the relocation of mobile homes have no direct financial consequences. The clarification of the law in relation to re-siting of mobile homes is also not assumed to have a financial impact. However, it would be anticipated that these changes should lead to less applications to the courts or Tribunal.

253. Costs in terms of training of licensing authority and Residential Property Tribunal staff in relation to these changes are covered later in the EM.

Pitch fees

254. This Bill makes it explicit that a site operator must not pass on any costs that are incurred by them in order to implement the changes to be made by this Bill, in the next or any future pitch fee review. There is currently a presumption that pitch fees can be increased or decreased annually by an amount equal to the increase or decrease in the Retail Price Index (RPI). The Bill will substitute the Consumer Prices Index (CPI) for the RPI. Looking at the past two years, up to July 2012, the CPI has been 0.6 percentage points lower than the RPI. This will have an impact on the amount of income that site operators can potentially raise through the pitch fee over time. Whilst the impact of this change is not predictable due to the nature of fluctuations between the two indices, if a site owner of a 30 caravan site with £150 monthly fees for all residents would have annual fee income of £54,000, 0.6% of this is £324. This is not included as a cost as the pitch fee is simply a transfer from residents to site owners. However, this is highlighted as a consequence of the Bill.

Residential Property Tribunal (RPT)

255. See Paragraph 115 for more details on the Residential Property Tribunal. The RPT will have jurisdiction over all disputes related to this Bill, aside from criminal prosecutions.
256. Earlier this year, most disputes relating to Mobile Homes under existing legislation were transferred to the Residential Property Tribunal. The underlying reasons for the transfer were to provide a more cost effective, informal and quicker access to justice in dispute resolution. In their response to the consultation on this Bill the RPT stated that at the time the Tribunal had received no valid applications under the existing legislation so it is difficult to judge the likely impact of the proposed Bill, however this does not suggest that the number of cases falling to the RPT will be large.
257. The Bill does include a number of situations where the RPT may be involved with some proposals likely to be more frequently used than others. The effect of changing the law in relation to the site owners' veto on the sale of a home may go a long way to reducing disputes which would otherwise come to the Tribunal. However, if enforcement action is used by the Local Authorities of Wales, then appeals to the Tribunal will follow. Training will have to be provided to members on the new legislation and to the office staff.
258. If we were to assume that there are three cases heard a year, with appeal costs estimated at £500 a case in preparing for and attending the Tribunal, this would lead to an annual cost of £1,500 to the site owner.
259. If we were to assume that there are three cases heard a year, with appeal costs estimated at £500 a case to the licensing authority in preparing for and attending the Tribunal, this would lead to an annual cost of £1,500 to the licensing authority.
260. A Tribunal of Lawyer, Surveyor and Lay Person costs over £1,000 per day leaving aside the cost of a venue, travel and the office staff.

Therefore, if we assumed 3 cases of 2 days each per year this could be up to £6,000 or £8,000 including ancillary costs. This would equal £8,000 per year. There would need to be training for Tribunal staff, estimates for training and publicity are included in figures provided by the Welsh Government with regards to transitional costs of the Bill.

261. Costs for residents are not included as it is anticipated that the provisions within the Bill would make it less likely for resident to need recourse to legal action than is currently the case and the availability of the RPT will mean that costs will be lower than in the past. Under current provisions, an application to the RPT starts at £150 and could go up to £500 depending on the detail of the case. Regulations could be used to amend these amounts.

Other costs

262. Additional training would be needed for licensing authority staff in the first year along with publicity costs, , estimates for training and publicity are included in figures provided by the Welsh Government with regards to transitional costs of the Bill.

263. In the unlikely event that a licensing authority were required to take over the management of a site, the authority would be able to recover management costs from site income, therefore costs are not included to cover this eventuality.

Welsh Government

264. There will also be costs for the Welsh Government due to the number of regulations and order making powers in the Bill. These will generally be transitional costs that could involve the setting of and consulting on legislation and publicising decisions. It is difficult to estimate the costs that will fall on the Welsh Government, as the timing and extent of resource input will be decided within the relevant department. Also, some of the powers are similar to those in existing housing legislation or current industry standards.

265. There are fourteen regulation and order-making powers, and the Welsh Government may need to draft, consult upon and implement these. However, existing housing legislation, particularly in relation to Houses in Multiple Occupation, may provide a basis for some of the new legislation. There is also provision for two sets of guidance.

266. Although costs will vary due to the complexity of regulations and guidance prescribed. We approached the Welsh Government for more detailed estimates of what the implications of this Bill will be in terms of costs to produce regulations and guidance. The Welsh Government estimated that transitional costs for the set of 14 regulation and order making powers and two guidance documents would be estimated to be at least £270,000. This includes their preparation, publication and publicity along with training for staff who would enforce these regulations and adhere to guidance.

Summary of costs

Site owners

267. There will be a number of costs which will fall on site owners these are summarised below:

- Site licence fees – illustrative figure £340,000. Transitional period, assumed to be the first year. The licence will last up to five years.
- Fit and proper person test though dependent on regulations, likely to be approximately £10,000 every five years.
- Administrative costs for licence application, £9,200 in first year.
- Amendment of rules, agreement or licence £2,300 a year.
- Administrative support for licensing authority monitoring £9,200 from year 2.
- Tribunal administration costs £1,500 per year.
- Change from RPI to CPI ceiling on pitch fee increase over time, will have an impact on site owner income and residents pitch fees paid.
- Over the first five years of the Bill this would equate to around £415,000.

Local authorities

- Site fee income – illustrative figure £340,000.
- Four EHO equivalent staff in first year to support implementation of licensing, £160,000.
- Two technical officers to cover additional monitoring £60,000 a year from year 2 onwards.
- Tribunal administration costs £1,500 per year.
- Training and publicity costs are included in Welsh Government transitional costs.

- Over the first five years of the Bill this would equate to around £67,500 (net of £340,000 illustrative income).

Residential Property Tribunal

- A Tribunal of Lawyer, Surveyor and Lay Person costs £6,000 or £8,000 including ancillary costs a year. With an additional training costs in the first year for Tribunal staff, these are included in Welsh Government transitional costs.
- Over the first five years of the Bill this would equate to around £40,000.

Welsh Government

268. There will also be costs for the Welsh Government dependent on the level of regulations in the Bill and how much existing legislation needs to be amended or replaced. This will place an administrative burden on Welsh Government staff. Transitional costs were estimated by the Welsh Government to be at least £270,000, this includes preparation, publication and publicity along with training for staff who would enforce these regulations and adhere to guidance.

²These figures were provided by the Welsh Government, a more detailed breakdown of what is included in these costs is being sought. Timing of costs will be dependent on timetable of implementation, for simplicity all transitional costs are included in year 1.

Benefits

269. The benefits are difficult to put a financial value on:

- The current legal system is complex. Fines are currently at a low level which does not make it cost effective for local authorities to monitor and enforce legislation effectively.
- The current system of enforcement is cumbersome and the new system would therefore be likely to result in savings for local authorities in terms of current enforcement costs.
- The proposed system is intended to give local authorities the powers and funding to effectively oversee the industry, through licence fees, fixed penalty income and any recovered enforcement costs. This should improve standards at sites which currently provide an unacceptable service
- The legal system will reduce the opportunities currently being exploited by a minority criminal element at the expense of a mainly elderly population. The system should also push to raise standards at sites which have an unacceptable level of facilities.
- The incidence of elderly residents being coerced out of their accommodation will be reduced by this Bill and there will be less demand to house vulnerable people removed from sites and potentially made homeless.

Unintended consequences

270. There were fears raised in consultation responses that having a fixed term license would make banks less likely to provide financing for park homes sites. However, this appears unlikely as banks will lend to many other types of businesses and industry which require licences, including HMO landlords who also require 5 year renewable licences.

271. The additional costs, if they are borne by site owners entirely, will have a marginally detrimental effect on site profitability, along with the slight reduction in capacity to raise the pitch fee, caused by the switch from the use of RPI to CPI in terms of expected maximum increase over time. This may lead to less money being invested in park facilities. If a park were to become unprofitable in the long run this could lead to a site owner considering changing the status of their parks or leaving the industry.

272. The Bill prohibits the passing on of additional costs in relation to this Bill. If the additional costs were to be passed on to park residents, this could have a considerable impact on residents. Especially as research suggests that over two-thirds of residents on mobile home sites are elderly, well over half of households on mobile home sites had a monthly income of less than £800 per month. Also, any significant increase in living costs could impact on the desirability and value of park homes.

Equality considerations

273. The Bill will ensure that as part of the licensing process, site owners and managers will be required to pass a fit and proper person test. One of the criteria that the licensing authority will be able to use to assess an applicant is whether they have discriminated on the basis of a protected characteristic under the Equality Act 2010.

274. It is common practice for site rules to restrict occupancy of mobile homes to people over a certain age. This could potentially be challenged on the basis of age discrimination. Section 29 of the Equality Act 2010 (the 2010 Act) prevents a service provider discriminating against a person requiring a service by not providing the person with the service. This would apply to mobile home site operators. However, The UK Government has used its powers under the 2010 Act to make an order that amends the 2010 Act by inserting new paragraph 30D into Part 7, Schedule 3 to the Act, so that the owner of a mobile home park does not violate the 2010 Act if he requires a person to have attained a particular age before being allowed to occupy a mobile home on the site.³⁰

Part 3: Explanatory Notes

Regulated Mobile Home Sites (Wales) Bill

Explanatory Notes on Sections

INTRODUCTION

1. These Explanatory Notes are for the Regulated Mobile Home Sites (Wales) Bill introduced into the National Assembly for Wales on 24 October 2012.

2. The notes have been prepared by Peter Black AM, the proposer of the Bill, in order to assist the reader of the Bill and also to help inform the debate on the Bill.

3. The notes should be read in conjunction with the Bill, but do not form part of it. The notes are not intended to be a comprehensive description of the Bill, and where a section of the Bill does not seem to require any explanation or comment, none is given.

4. The powers to make the Bill are contained in Part 4 of the Government of Wales Act 2006 (“GOWA 2006”) and subjects 11, 12, and 18 of Schedule 7 to that Act.

5. The National Assembly for Wales has the requisite legislative competence to make provision for and in connection with such proposals by virtue of the following subjects in Schedule 7:-

- (i) “residential caravans and mobile homes” under the heading of housing (subject 11);
- (ii) “powers and duties of local authorities and their members and officers. Local government finance” under the heading of Local Government (subject 12); and

(iii) “caravan sites” under the heading of Town and Country Planning (subject 18).

6. The following terms are used in these Explanatory Notes:

CONTEXT & AIMS

7. Mobile homes used by their owners all year round as their primary residence, as opposed to holiday accommodation are commonly referred to as Park homes and are a popular choice for older people wishing to downsize. However, this means that many people living in park homes are particularly vulnerable due not only to their age but also their inability to represent themselves effectively, out of lack of confidence and, in many cases, fear.

8. Currently the law that regulates mobile home occupation is contained within a number of pieces of primary and secondary legislation which have developed over the last 50 years including in particular the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (the 1960 Act), the Caravan Sites Act 1968 (1968 Act), and the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (1983 Act).

9. The Proposed Bill aims to regulate more fairly the process by which residential mobile home (park home) sites are managed and sold in Wales including by removing the site owner's power to block sales, and will address some of the main problems with the current management and maintenance of mobile home sites.

10. The Bill will establish:-

- a licensing and inspection regime which will introduce consistency and give licensing authorities the tools and guidance they need to license, monitor and inspect mobile homes sites effectively;
- a requirement that site owners, managers, and any person proposed to be involved in the management of the site must pass a "fit and proper" person test as part of the new licensing system; and

- an effective enforcement regime, placing responsibility on site licensing authorities to enforce the licensing regime and to take action in the case of non-compliance.

COMMENTARY ON SECTIONS

Part 1 – Introductory

Section 1: Interpretation and application

11. This section explains the meaning of “regulated site”, and confirms that “protected site” and “mobile home” retain their meanings contained in the Mobile Homes Act 1983.

12. “Regulated site” is a protected site in Wales which has at least one mobile home stationed on it under an agreement to which the 1983 Act applies. Section 1(1) of that Act specifies that:

“(1) This Act applies to any agreement under which a person (“the occupier”) is entitled—

- (a) to station a mobile home on land forming part of a protected site; and
- (b) to occupy the mobile home as his only or main residence.”

13. “Protected Site” has the meaning given to it in section 5 of the 1983 Act; it does not include any land occupied by a Local Authority as a caravan site providing accommodation for gipsies (and travellers).

14. “Mobile home” has the same meaning as a “caravan” which is defined in section 29 of the 1960 Act as “any structure designed or adapted for human habitation which is capable of being moved from one place to another (whether by being towed, or by being transported on a motor vehicle or trailer) and any motor vehicle so designed or adapted, but does not include—

- (a) any railway rolling stock which is for the time being on rails forming part of a railway system, or
- (b) any tent”

15. Section 1 of the Bill also makes provision for the licensing of those parts of protected sites that have residential mobile homes stationed on them. Any licence required under the Part 2 of the Bill relates to those particular part(s), and the regulated site provisions in the Bill apply to those part(s) of the regulated site(s).

16. This section has the effect of confirming that mobile homes used for non residential purposes e.g. holiday caravans do not fall within the remit of this Bill, nor to those occupied by site owners, their family, or agents / employees.

17. The section refers to section 32 which sets out further terms that are used in the Bill.

Section 2: Structure of the Act

18. This section provides an overview of the main 5 Parts of the Act, which has 33 sections and one Schedule. It does not itself make any change to the legal position.

Part 2 - Licensing of Regulated Sites

Section 3: Site Licensing Authorities

19. This section provides for, defines, and sets of the general duties of “Site licensing authorities” in Wales.

20. “Site licensing authorities” are county and county borough councils in Wales, which are under a duty to licence regulated sites within their area(s).

21. This section imposes general duties on Licensing Authorities to make arrangements for effectively:-

- implementing a licensing regime in their areas;
- enforcing licensing conditions; and
- determining licence applications within reasonable timescales.

Section 4: Collaborative discharge of functions

22. This section requires the Site Licensing Authorities to have regard (amongst other things) to working collaboratively in discharging their licensing functions under Part 2 of the Bill.

23. For the purposes of the Bill, “powers of collaboration” are given the same meaning as that contained in section 11 of the Local Government (Wales) Measure 2009, and include powers in other legislation as well as those conferred by that Measure.

Section 5: Requirement for regulated sites to be licensed

24. This section provides that every regulated site to which this Part applies must be licensed unless a temporary exemption notice is in force or treated as been given, or the site is an exempted site specified in an order made by Welsh Ministers. Those matters are dealt with in more detail in subsequent sections.

25. This section confirms that a regulated site licence only authorises the stationing of a maximum number of mobile homes which is specified in the licence.

26. This section imposes a duty on Site licensing authorities to take all reasonable steps to ensure that licensing applications for regulated sites in its area are in fact made to it. The intention is to ensure that sites do not seek to avoid the licensing system, for example by pretending to be holiday rather than residential sites.

Section 6: Applications for licences

27. This section requires licence applications to be made to the Site licensing authority in whose area the regulated site is, in accordance with particular requirements, and may include the payment of an application fee.

28. The licence application must identify the owner(s) and manager(s) of the regulated site, and a written statement (provided to home occupiers under the 1983 Act), any rules governing residence on, or visitors to the site, and consultation evidence with mobile home occupiers, prospective occupiers, and their representatives, must be submitted with the licence application.

29. The licensing application must meet any requirements that the licensing authority specifies including providing sufficient information to determine fitness and suitability, and the payment of a fee.

30. This section confers regulation making duties on Welsh Ministers to prescribe various matters relating to licence applications, including the manner and form of applications, the provision of copies of, or information about, applications, the information to be submitted with applications, the maximum licence fees chargeable, and any exemptions or refunds of fees chargeable.

31. Site Licensing authorities can take into account all costs incurred by them in operating the new licensing scheme established by the Bill before setting any licence fee under this section.

Section 7: Grant or refusal of licence

32. This section sets out the grounds on which a site licensing authority must decide whether or not to grant or refuse a licence.

33. A licence may be granted to the licence holder (s) who is/are the owner(s) of the site if the regulated site is a suitable site for stationing the maximum number of mobile homes or can be rendered suitable by imposing conditions and, the proposed licence holder or manager is a fit and proper person, and that the proposed site management arrangements are satisfactory.

34. This section confirms that the maximum number of mobile homes is the number specified in the licence application, or other maximum that the site licensing authority may decide.

Section 8: Tests as to suitability for the stationing of mobile homes

35. This section sets out what a licensing authority needs to consider in determining the suitability or otherwise of a regulated site for the stationing of mobile homes.

36. A licensing authority must be satisfied that the regulated site is reasonably suitable for stationing the maximum number of mobile homes, and meets the prescribed standards set by Welsh Ministers for the stationing of mobile homes on regulated sites.

37. A site licensing authority may require different, but not lower standards than those prescribed in regulations when determining the suitability of stationing a mobile home.

38. This section confers a regulation making duty on Welsh Ministers to “prescribe standards” in regulations for the stationing of mobile homes on regulated sites.

Section 9: Tests for fitness etc., and satisfactory management arrangements

39. This section establishes a “fit and proper person test” that applies to all licence holders/owners, managers, and any other person involved in the management of a regulated site in Wales.

40. The relevant evidence to be taken into account in determining fitness includes whether any person associated or formerly associated with the owner or proposed owner or manager has:-

- committed any offences involving fraud or other dishonesty, violence, or drugs, or any offence requiring notification listed in Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003;
- unlawfully discriminated contrary to equality law in carrying on any business;
- breached housing, landlord and tenant, or town and country planning law; or
- breached any applicable code of practice on the management of regulated sites, or management regulations made by Welsh Ministers in relation to regulated sites under this Bill.

41. The section also sets out the matters to be addressed when considering whether or not the proposed management arrangements of the site are satisfactory in terms of competence and fitness of the manager and the proposed management and funding structures.

Section 10: Licence conditions

42. This section sets out the licensing conditions that apply to a licence issued under the new licensing regime established by this Bill.

43. The licence conditions which licence holders must follow include:-

- adhering to the terms of any agreement to which section 1 of the 1983 Act relates;
- enforcement of any rules relating to residing on or visiting regulated sites;
- to prominently display on the site copies of the licence, the written statement, and the rules relating to residing on or visiting regulated sites;
- not to commit or causing or permit others to commit any act leading to offences of unlawful eviction or harassment under section 3 of the 1968 Act;
- notifying the licensing authority of any changes to information contained in or provided with the licence application.

44. The Site licensing Authority can impose other conditions that it considers appropriate for regulating the management, use and occupation of the regulated site including the following conditions:-

- imposing restrictions or prohibitions on the use or occupation of parts of the site;
- requiring reasonable and practicable steps to be taken to prevent or reduce anti social behaviour by occupiers or visitors to the site;
- installing and making facilities and equipment available in good repair and working order to meet the prescribed standards set out in Management Regulations;
- carrying out necessary works to those facilities and equipment to comply with prescribed standards within specified timescales;

- requiring the site owner or manager to attend training courses on the code of practice on the management of regulated sites.

45. Licence conditions which impose, restrict, or oblige, only apply to the site owner unless another person has consented to those licence conditions.

46. This section enables Welsh Ministers to issue guidance on the form and content of licence conditions, and Site Licensing Authorities must have regard to such guidance.

Section 11: Licences: general requirements and duration

47. This section provides that a person controlling or managing a site must have a separate licence for each regulated site.

48. The following form part of the licence and must be attached to it:-

- (i) the written statement provided to site occupiers under section 1 of the Mobile Homes Act 1983; and
- (ii) any rules governing residence of, or visiting the regulated sites.

49. A licence is valid for a maximum period of 5 years from the date it was granted, or the date it came into force. Licences are non transferrable.

50. A licence comes into force at a time specified in or determined by the licence, and continues in force unless terminated or revoked before that period.

51. If the site owner dies or there is a change in site ownership, then for a period of 3 months from the date of death or from the date a new site owner takes over the site, it is treated as if a temporary exemption period applies to the site.

52. If a licence holders personal representative or a new owner of a site requests the licensing authority to grant a temporary exemption notice during the 3 month period after the date of the initial period, then the site is exempted from the licensing requirements. This 3 month initial period may be renewed for further periods of 3 months.

53. If the licensing authority does not serve a temporary exemption notice having been requested to do so, it must promptly inform the person who made the request of the decision, the reasons, and date on which it was made.

Section 12: Variation of licences

54. Usually the licence conditions will remain the same for the duration of the licence, but it may be necessary for the site licensing authority to vary the licence in certain circumstances. This section allows the site licensing authority to vary a licence.

55. A licensing authority can vary a licence with the agreement of the licence holder, or if it considers there has been a change of circumstances (including new information coming to light) since the licence was granted.

56. A licensing authority cannot vary the terms of:-

- an agreement issued under section 1 of the Mobile Homes Act 1983 unless the variation has been agreed or approved under the 1983 Act; or
- the rules governing residing at or visiting the site unless all mobile home occupiers and any qualifying residents' association have been consulted, and the site licensing authority believes that the majority of occupiers agree the variation.

57. When considering a variation in the number of homes to be authorised, the licensing authority must apply to the circumstances the same standards that existed at the time it granted the original licence.

58. However, the licensing authority may apply new standards if the prescribed standards applicable at the time the licence was granted have been revised or superseded by new regulations made by Welsh Ministers on the suitability of stationing mobile homes.

59. A variation made with the licence holders' agreement takes effect immediately. Otherwise the variation does not come into effect until the time for making an appeal has expired, or any appeal against it is disposed of or withdrawn.

60. A licence can be varied by the licensing authority if the licence holder makes an application or on the licensing authority's own initiative.

Section 13: Revocation of licences

61. This section provides the circumstances when a site licensing authority can revoke a licence which are:-

- with the licence holders agreement;
- in certain circumstances relating to the licence holder or other persons are met;
- in certain circumstances relating to the regulated site; or
- in any other circumstances prescribed by regulations made by Welsh Ministers.

62. The circumstances relating to the licence holder or other persons that are relevant to determining whether a licence can be revoked are:-

- when the Licensing Authority considers that the licence holder or any other person has committed a serious breach of a licence condition or repeated breaches of such a condition;
- when the Licensing Authority no longer believes that the licence holder is a fit and proper person to own the regulated site;

- when the Licensing Authority no longer believes the managers of the site are fit and proper persons to manage the site.

63. When a site licensing authority is considering whether to revoke a licence on the grounds that the site is not reasonably suitable for stationing the maximum number of mobile homes, the same standards which existed at the time when the licence was granted must be taken into account. The licensing authority may apply new standards if the prescribed standards applicable at the time the licence was granted have been revised or superseded by new regulations made by Welsh Ministers on the suitability of stationing mobile homes.

64. A revocation made with the licence holders' agreement takes effect immediately. Otherwise the revocation does not come into effect until the time for making an appeal has expired, or any appeal against it is disposed of or withdrawn.

Section 14: Register of licences

65. This section sets out the requirements for a register of licences, and imposes a duty on licensing authorities to keep a register of regulated site licences for their areas.

66. The register must contain copies of all licences currently in force for the licensing authority's area, and the register must be made available for public inspection during office hours at the licensing authority's main office.

Section 15: Procedure relating to licences

67. This section confers a regulation making duty on Welsh Ministers to make regulations about licence procedures that licensing authorities must follow dealing with the granting, refusing, varying, and revoking of licences.

Section 16: Appeals and other determinations

68. This section provides owners with a right to appeal to the Residential Property Tribunal against decisions made by licensing authorities about the following matters:-

- refusal of licences;
- maximum number of mobile homes specified in a licence;
- duration of licences;
- licence conditions;
- revocation of licences;
- variation of licences;
- refusal to serve temporary exemption notices; and
- appointment of interim managers.

69. Any appeal will be a rehearing, and will take into consideration relevant legislation and codes of conduct, and may be determined having regard to matters not known to the authority at the time of the original decision.

70. The powers available to the tribunal are to confirm or reverse a decision made by the authority. If the Tribunal reverses a decision it must direct the authority to take the necessary steps to give effect to the tribunals decision.

71. The section imposes a regulation making duty on Welsh Ministers to make regulations setting out the appeals procedure to be followed. This includes appeals made by the authority or the licence holder based on issues arising from the licensing authority executing works at the site.

Section 17: Enforcement

72. This section deals with enforcement and requires a licensing authority in discharging its general duty to enforce licence conditions effectively under section 3 of the Bill to make appropriate enforcement arrangements, and in doing so to have regard to guidance issued by Welsh Ministers.

Section 18: Execution of works by the licensing authority

73. This section provides for licensing authority to take action when it considers that works must be carried out to comply with licensing conditions. The authority may serve a notice on the licence holders requiring them to carry out the necessary work to the satisfaction of the authority within reasonable time limits.

74. If the licence holder fails to carry out the works specified in a notice the licensing authority can enter the regulated site and carry out or complete the necessary work. The licence holder is liable to reimburse the authority for any costs reasonably incurred relating to the written notice and carrying out or completing the necessary work.

75. The licensing authority or the licence holder may refer certain matters to the tribunal to decide any disputes about the extent of any works, the time limits specified in the notice, whether the work has been completed before the authority executed the works, and the reasonable costs incurred.

Section 19: Appointment of interim manager

76. This section allows the licensing authority to appoint an interim manager to manage a regulated site instead of revoking the licence in certain circumstances including:-

- When the licence holder or any other person has committed a serious breach of licence condition(s);

- When the licensing authority believes that the licence holder is no longer a fit and proper person to own a site, or the manager is no longer a fit and proper person to manage the site.

77. The interim manager's appointment is on the terms and conditions (including as to remuneration and expenses) specified in, or determined in accordance with, the appointment. An interim manager has the power specified in the appointment and other power specified in the appointment for the management of the site. This includes the power to enter into agreements and take other action on behalf of the licence holder.

78. The licensing authority can give the interim manager specific or general directions to follow, and may amend or withdraw any directions.

79. The interim manager's appointment will cease if the licence is terminated, revoked, or by a timescale set out in the interim manager's appointment.

80. The licensing authority can appoint a new interim manager to replace any interim manager who ceases to act as such before the end of their appointment.

81. The interim manager's salary and expenses can be deducted by the interim manager from any income which the licence holder is entitled to receive from the site and if there is insufficient income then salary and expenses are paid by the licensing authority.

Section 20: Exercise of powers under sections 13 and 19

82. This section enables a qualifying residents' association to request the licensing authority to consider:

- whether there is a serious or repeated breach or breaches of licence conditions,

- whether the licence holder is a fit and proper person to be the owner, or
- whether the management of the site is no longer being carried out by a fit and proper person; and, if so,
- whether or not to revoke the licence or appoint an interim manager.

83. If so, the Licensing Authority must consider whether to exercise its powers set out in section 13 of the Bill dealing with revocation of licences or section 19 dealing with the appointment of an interim manager.

84. In any event, the licensing Authority may exercise its powers under sections 13 and 19 of the Bill on its own initiative.

Section 21: Power of entry of officers (etc.) of site licensing authorities

85. This section provides any authorised officer or agent of the licensing authority with powers of entry to enter a regulated site at all reasonable hours if there are reasonable grounds for entry.

86. The purposes for which the licensing authority may exercise the power are to enable the licensing authority to determine what licence conditions should apply, whether there is, or has been, a breach of a licence conditions or that the licensing regime or enforcement provisions of the Act have been breached, or for taking any action. Entry to the regulated site is only permitted as of right if 24 hours notice has been given to the owner.

87. A magistrate may grant a warrant to authorise entry, if a magistrate concludes that access to land has been refused, or the owner is temporarily absent and there is an urgency, or that an application for access would defeat the object and there is a reasonable ground for entering the land.

88. Any warrant for entry is valid until the purpose of the entry is satisfied.

89. Any authorised officer or agent who enters can be accompanied by other persons.

90. Any person who wilfully obstructs any person who is acting under this section itself, or by virtue of a warrant is liable to a fine up to a maximum of £2500 .

Section 22: Offences in relation to licensing of regulated sites

91. This section creates offences in relation to the licensing of regulated sites, and provides that owners or managers of a regulated site commit an offence if they do not hold a required licence.

92. The licence holders or managers of a regulated site commits an offence if they knowingly allow more mobile homes to be stationed on the site than is authorised by the licence.

93. In addition, any person who is a licence holder or manager of a regulated site, or subject to licence restrictions and obligations, or who is an employee or agent of these persons, who knowingly cause or permit licence conditions to be breached, commits an offence.

94. In certain circumstances, the defence of reasonable excuse is available for any of these offences if an accused person can demonstrate such a defence.

95. The penalty for a summary offence is a maximum £5000 fine, or for an indictable offence is an unlimited fine.

Section 23: Fixed penalties

96. This section enables a licensing authority to use fixed penalties as an alternative means of enforcement when it considers that offences of failure to comply with licensing conditions have been committed.

97. Subsection (1) provides for an authorised officer of the licensing authority to issue a fixed penalty notice providing a person with the opportunity of discharging liability to conviction for a breach of a licence condition by paying an amount specified in the fixed penalty notice.

98. Subsection (2) provides that fixed penalties are payable to the relevant licensing authority whose officer issued the notice.

99. Subsection (3) provides that a persons who receives a fixed penalty notice has 14 days during which to pay the specified fine, in order to avoid magistrates court proceedings for the offence.

100. Subsection (4) requires the fixed penalty notice to provide sufficient information to the recipient to ensure that they are clear about the nature of the offence.

101. Subsection (5) requires the fixed penalty notice to detail certain information which includes the period during which proceedings will not be taken in relation to the offence, the fixed penalty amount, and the contact details to whom and where the fixed penalty notice can be paid.

102. Subsection (6) confirms that the payment method of the fixed penalty is by posting a prepaid letter enclosing the fixed penalty amount.

103. Subsection (7) confirms that if a letter discharging payment is sent, that payment is deemed to be made at the time that the letter would have been delivered in the ordinary course of post.

104. Subsection (8) confers a duty on Welsh Ministers to make regulations specifying the form of a fixed penalty notice. These regulations are subject to annulment by the National Assembly.

105. Subsection (9) provides that if proceedings are issued a certificate signed on behalf of the chief finance officer of a licensing authority stating that payment of a fixed penalty has been received or not by a specified date in the certificate is evidence of facts stated.

106. Subsection (10) defines “authorised officer” and “Chief finance officer”.

107. “Authorised officer” is a person authorised in writing by the licensing authority to give fixed penalty notices. This includes a direct employee or an employee of a person who has a contract with the authority.

108. “Chief finance officer” is the person who has responsibility for the authority’s financial affairs.

Section 24: Amount of fixed penalty

109. This section provides that the fixed penalty payable is £100.

110. This section also empowers Welsh Ministers to make an order to change the fixed penalty fee as necessary, and substitute different amounts in future years. The Welsh Ministers powers are subject to the National Assembly affirmative resolution procedure.

Section 25: Other consequences of operating unlicensed regulated sites: repayment orders

111. This section defines an “unlicensed regulated site” as a site which requires to be licensed but is not.

112. Despite the common law rule that unlawful contracts are unenforceable, subsection (2) confirms that any pitch fee payment requirement, or periodical payments in connection with any agreement to which section 1 of the 1983 Act applies, or any other provision of such agreement, remain enforceable, but amounts paid in relation to certain payments under and in connection with any agreements are recoverable (subsection (4)).

113. A “repayment order” is an order which requires a person to pay the occupier what is specified in the order. A repayment order may include any sum paid to a site owner in relation to the purchase a mobile home on the site, any commission paid in relation to the sale of such a home, any pitch fee paid in relation to such a mobile home and any periodical payments paid in respect of such a mobile home.

114. The Residential Property Tribunal is empowered to make a repayment order if a mobile home occupier makes an application and the Tribunal is satisfied that an offence has been committed by the owner or manager of a regulated site, if the occupier made a payment to someone with control of or managing a site during the time when the offence was being committed, and the application is made within 12 months from the date of conviction.

Section 26: Further provisions about repayment orders

115. This section sets out further provisions about repayment orders made by a tribunal.

116. The amount payable under a repayment order must be reasonable to the Tribunal in the circumstances, and no unreasonable amount can be required.

117. The Tribunal must take into account the total amount of relevant payments, the amount actually received, whether the appropriate person has been convicted of an offence, the appropriate person's conduct and financial circumstances, and, for an application made by an occupier, the conduct of that occupier.

118. A resident's application for a repayment order must relate to amounts payable within the 12 month period from the date of the application.

119. Amounts payable to an occupier under a repayment order are debts owed which are recoverable.

Part 3 - Amendments to the Mobile Homes Act 1983

Section 27: Amendments to the Mobile Homes Act 1983

120. This section gives effect to the Schedule to the Bill, which sets out relevant amendments to the Mobile Homes Act 1983.

Part 4 – Management of Regulated SitesSection 28: Approval of codes of practice with regard to the management of regulated sites

121. This section empowers Welsh Ministers by Order to approve a code of conduct setting out standards of conduct and practice for the management of regulated sites, to approve modifications to such codes, or to withdraw approval of codes or modifications.

122. Before Welsh Ministers approve codes of practice or modifications they must consult managers and mobile home occupiers of regulated sites, or others who represents their interests.

123. Welsh Ministers must be satisfied before approving a code of practice or modification to it that the code or modification has been published in the correct manner to bring it to the attention of those most likely to be affected by it, or arrangements for such publication have been made.

124. Welsh Ministers can approve a code of practice which provides differently for different cases or descriptions of cases.

125. Failure to comply with a code of practice is not in itself make a person liable to civil or criminal proceedings, though it may be relevant evidence in such a case.

Section 29: Management regulations in respect of regulated sites

126. This section imposes a duty on Welsh Ministers to make regulations to ensure that there are satisfactory management arrangements for sites and that satisfactory management standards are observed.

127. The regulations must specify duties of managers to repair, maintain, clean, and keep in good order facilities and equipment on the site, and impose duties on mobile home occupiers to enable managers to manage the site effectively.

128. Failure to comply with these regulations results in offence being committed. A defence of reasonable excuse is available for those who have failed to comply with the regulations. Offences are punishable summarily to a fine not exceeding £5000.

Section 30: Qualifying residents' association

129. This section makes provisions about qualifying residents' associations, and requires a qualifying residents' association to lodge a membership list with the licensing authority.

130. The Licensing Authority must be satisfied that at least 50% of the mobile home occupiers are members of the association, and must give notice to the association and the licence holder.

131. A residents' association must notify the licensing authority as soon as reasonably practicable of any membership changes, and must provide an up to date list to the licensing authority.

132. If the licensing authority believes that the membership of the residents' association falls below 50% of mobile home occupiers, the authority must give notice to the residents' association and the licence holder.

133. In compliance with the Freedom of Information Act 2000, a licensing authority must not disclose the list of residents' association members held by it, and should a breach occur the person who lodged the membership list can issue proceedings.

Part 5 – Miscellaneous

Section 31: Orders and regulations

134. This section provides that a power (including a duty) to make regulations and orders under the Bill are (apart from orders varying the fixed penalty and Commencement Orders) are subject to the negative procedure.

135. This section provides power to make orders or regulations under the Bill to include powers to make incidental, supplementary, transitory, transitional, or saving provisions as Welsh Ministers think fit.

136. The section also includes a power to make consequential changes to other legislation, the procedure for which will depend on the nature of the legislation to be amended.

Section 32: Interpretation

137. This section defines a number of terms used in the Bill. These are ‘site licensing authority’, ‘owner’, ‘occupier’, ‘person’, ‘pitch fee’ and ‘the tribunal’.

Section 33: Short title, repeals, and commencement

138. This section provides that the short title of the legislation will be the Regulated Mobile Home Sites (Wales) Act 2013, and that the Bill comes into force with provisions made by Welsh Ministers by Order.

Schedule - Amendments to the Mobile Homes Act 1983

139. The Schedule lists the amendments to the 1983 Act

Section 3 of the 1983 Act

Succession rights, successors in title of the owner.

140. Succession rights and the right to succeed to the agreement which the deceased mobile home occupier entered into under the 1983 Act are given to any person residing in the mobile home as their only or main residence who is a widow(er), civil partner of the deceased mobile home owner, or any member of their family, or other person entitled by will or under intestacy to occupy the mobile home.

141. This change strengthens the position of co-owners, married couples, civil partners, family members and friends.

Schedule 1 to the 1983 Act

Selling the mobile home and assigning the agreement.

142. New provisions are inserted into Schedule 1 to the 1983 Act which will allow a mobile home occupier to sell the mobile home and to assign an agreement. The need for approval from the site owner to a sale or an assignment is no longer required. If a mobile home is sold the site owner is entitled to receive commission on the sale which at the current rate cannot exceed 10% of the sale price. For the sale and the assignment to have effect, the site owner must receive any commission owed.

Re-siting of the mobile home

143. A site owner who needs to carry out essential repair work which necessitates the mobile home to be moved, may make an application to the Tribunal to re-site the mobile home. The Tribunal must be satisfied that the other pitch is broadly comparable to the original pitch. If it is impractical for the site owner to make an application due to urgency before the mobile home is re-sited, then the Tribunal must be satisfied that the other pitch is broadly comparable to the original pitch and if it is not the mobile home must be returned to its original pitch.

Pitch fees

144. When determining the amount of pitch fee the site operators must not pass on any costs incurred by them in complying with duty under the licensing requirements for regulated sites, or relating to any proceedings brought under the Bill/Act.

145. The pitch fee review and presumption that pitch fees can be increased or decreased annually is changed from being based on the Retail Price Index to the Consumer Prices Index.

Owners' obligations

146. New requirements are inserted which ensure that the site owner cannot do anything or cause anything to be done which may adversely affect the mobile home occupier's ability to perform their obligations or which may deter the occupier from making internal improvements to the mobile home or interfere with the occupier's ability to do so. The occupier cannot carry out works to the mobile home which are prohibited by agreement or any enactment. If the works require the consent of the site owner, then the site owner can not unreasonably withhold any consent.

Qualifying residents association

147. The rules and constitution of qualifying residents associations are open to public inspection, and a requirement is added so that qualifying residents associations must lodge an up to date copy of their membership list with the Site licensing authority
